CRASH AND LEARN

Rusty Wallace on the '93 Daytona 500 smash-up that should have killed him.

HOW DID IT START?
I was running in the fourth position when I exited turn two and saw Michael Waltrip and another car run into each other at the top of the racetrack. Their cars started slipping and sliding around, and they weren't handling well. As I was going by them, Michael Waltrip hit me at over 200 mph in my right rear panel.

OUCH. THEN WHAT?
My car started spinning, and the left side tires dug into the ground. That's when I started flipping—all the way down the back straightaway. It just kept hitting and hitting and hitting—close to 20 times. The roof was flying off; pieces of metal were everywhere like flying razor blades. I was just hoping all that shrapnel wouldn't impale me.

YET YOU MANAGED NOT TO DIE.
I bent my head down, tucked my elbows in real tight, and did everything but kiss my ass goodbye. When I landed, I couldn't believe I had gotten out of that unhurt. I went from having the opportunity to win the Daytona 500 to sitting there completely destroyed in a pile.

Check out maxim.com to see video of Rusty cheating death, and p.92 for our wild oral history of the Daytona 500.

Take a look at the cover of this magazine. What's the first thing that comes to mind, the first impulse you feel? (If you're scratching your head, put the mag down immediately and buy a copy of Details.) It's no secret that we're a bit preoccupied with sex. It's one of the things we share with our 14 million monthly readers. But sexiness is about more than just the curve of a woman's back, her long legs, or even the absence thereof (hey, no judgments!). It can also be an automobile's elegantly descending roofline or the smell of its leather. A watch can be sexy. So can a furtive text message. Or a pair of sculpted $140,000 speakers. Sexiness is in the eye of the beholder, and, lucky you, you are beholding a special issue that celebrates "The Sexiest Everything 2008." It is a handbook to the hottest people, places, and things in modern existence.

How did we come up with our definitive list? Experience. We've been at this game for 10-plus years now, and we're at the epicenter of all that is hot. Sure, looking around the office, some might see a scattered array of decrepit death-gray cubicles, littered with coffee cups and ignored deadline memos, but I see foot soldiers in sexiness. That's why we started by asking the staff for their picks of the most alluring things. A few of their responses:

"Girls who are shorter than me, which are not easy to find."—Executive Editor Dan Bova

"Blank VHS's, arrest records, the sound of frying bacon."—Assistant Editor Jesse Brukman

"Whiskey on a girl's lips, that Jamie dude from 30 Rock."—Senior Editor David Swanson

"Balloons. It drives me wild to think that they're about to pop!"—Deputy Editor Chris Wilson

OK, we probably should have cut that list off a bit sooner. But you get the point: No two people share the same turn-ons. In the end we polled countless correspondents and scoured the world in search of the sexiest women, gadgets, and murder weapons. We photographed Heidi Montag, TV's hottest reality-show vixen, and Sarah Mutch, the latest and possibly greatest Guess girl, minus her jeans. We threw in the sexiest mustache of all time (thank you, Burt Reynolds!). And because even the Maxim reader doesn't live by sexiness alone, we included a sweeping oral history of the Great American Race, the Daytona 500, and an incisive profile of the most hated man in the NFL. And the ultimate guide to the world's best potato chips. Which is also pretty sexy, come to think of it. Enjoy the issue, and happy Valentine's Day. Hope this gets you in the mood.

FEEL THE LOVE

All our hard work paid off in the form of correspondence! Which doesn't pay our whiskey bill, fellas.

But can she rub her tummy and hop on one foot?

Photo Finished

We recently received your December 2007 issue, and you guys put out one hell of a magazine. Sarah Michelle Gellar is as hot as a monkey in a firestorm. But my buddies and I just have one problem: Your mag is so thick with great pics and tasty licks that it's hard to find the features we're looking for!

Brian Kopec and Timothy Braun
Blacksburg, VA

It's cute that you guys wrote this letter together. Maybe you two can put your pretty heads together and figure out how to use a table of contents (p.5).

Huge Tool

The John C. Reilly interview [Icon, December] was awesome, and Nadine Velazquez's guide to stripping was hot ["From Earl to Eternity," December]. Glad you're back and kicking ass once again! Now how about hooking us up with some pics of the female carpenters on HGTV? That would really help fuel my ongoing "women with power tools" fetish!

Ryan O'Neil via e-mail

We dug around, but the best we could come up with were some beardless shots of Norm Abram. We'll pass them along to your parole officer. Enjoy!

Roped In

I've been a loyal wrestling fan for 18 years, and I'd like to think that I know most of the goings-on behind the pro scene (I keep tabs on a few of the "insider" Web sites). I have to say, I'm impressed—your reporting of the Benoit tragedy ["The Last Days of Chris Benoit," December] was fair and unbiased and provided an accurate look at the downward spiral of one of wrestling's greatest performers.

Jon Miller via e-mail

Glad you liked it, Jon. We've been wrestling fans all our lives, and we have the King Kong Bundy pajama set to prove it.

Dirty Rat Packer

Your magazine usually doesn't fall on my radar. But in December's Holiday Gift Guide, you weren't even cool enough to include Dean Martin on your list of people who "croaked" on Christmas. On behalf of Dino, screw you.

Kimberly Dotseth San Diego, CA

Screw us? Screw Dino! Back in '83, that slimy bastard cut out on an $800 bar tab, then left a half-dead hooker in our suite at the Sands. Beautiful singing voice, though.

Blame Canada

Why does Maxim always have the cover girl blocking the Maxim logo? As a longtime purchaser off the newsstand, I sometimes buy other magazines by accident! Do you have any suggestions on how to buy only Maxim and not support your competitors?

Isaac M. Checks St. Catharine's, Ontario

Before purchasing, examine it carefully. If you see any stories titled "Inside the Boys' Swim Team Locker Room" or "My Night With Larry Craig," or if it's titled Details, you're in the adult male section. Again.

EVEL DOES, IN FACT, DIE

We bid a final farewell to the greatest daredevil who ever lived.

It's not Vanity but it's Fair to say that Evel Knievel's final interview appeared in our pages: Pat Jordan's profile, "Evel Never Dies" [p.134, December], was the icon's last performance. Robert Craig Knievel died on November 30 at age 69, but his legacy lives on at every X Games. In fact, the father of extreme created a sport just by being the man he was. "He liked women, he liked booze, and he liked motorcycles," Jordan says. But 433 broken bones later, his legendary life finally caught up with him. "I didn't want to be the last to interview him," Jordan adds. "I wish he was alive today." So do we.

Joke of the Month!

A farmer is arrested for having sex with one of his cows. During the arraignment, the judge looks at him with disgust.

"Son, what the hell were you thinking?" he asks.

"Well, sir," the farmer replies. "I reckon that I must have been thinking about a younger, hotter cow."

JOKE INTERVENTION

Sometimes your e-mails scare us.

"What do you do when you see your wife staggering in the backyard? Shoot her again."
—from reader Claude T. Ourada

Maxim: Claude, this joke is kind of creepy. Did it really make you laugh?
Claude: When I first heard it, I couldn't stop laughing. I've been married 24 years. I enjoy this joke because of the irony of the answer.
Maxim: Do you hear voices in your head?
Claude: Voices in my head don't laugh. Voices in my head deal with other emotions.
Maxim: Please don't shoot us, OK?
Claude: I don't even own a gun.

A woman calls in sick one morning.

"What's the matter?" her boss asks.

"I have anal glaucoma," she says weakly.

"What the hell is anal glaucoma?" he asks.

"I can't see my ass coming to work today."

Whip Smart

One day Mom is cleaning Junior's room and finds a kinky S&M magazine. She hides it until Dad gets home and shows it to him.

"What should we do about this?" she asks.

"Well, I don't think you should spank him."

{IF IT'S OUT THERE, IT'S IN HERE}

MY FIRST TIME

NATASHA ALAM

You've seen this Uzbekistani model turned actress on shows like ER and Entourage, and later this year she'll be playing Eva Mendes' love interest in the star-heavy remake of The Women. But much more importantly, she knows how to use a sword.

First Love

I love my martial arts. I am taking a wu shu class where we learn to use weapons and fly and do kicks. You learn how to kick somebody in the ass and look good doing it!

First Time With a Guy

It was with the guy who was my first kiss. It was actually great. I think I had multiple orgasms. I think I fell in love with sex.

First Royal Flush

My ex-husband's family members were royalty in Iran, and they fled during the revolution. They didn't speak about it much. We got married, and I started getting all these party invitations from the royal family of Great Britain. And I found out that I am a princess! I couldn't believe it. But I found the good life ridiculous, unless you use it to help other people.

First Drink

My grandmother used to give me beer when I was four years old. She thought I was too skinny. She told me it was lemonade and was like, "Drink! Drink!" I didn't like it.

First Transgender Experience

I played a transvestite on Entourage. To make it realistic, they strapped a pair of prosthetic balls on me. I had to readjust my walk—it's different when you have something in between your legs! After the show came out, someone wrote on a blog: "Oh, yeah, she's a real tranny; I was with her last night." But I think it's pretty obvious that I'm not.—Lisa Lombardi

MAXIM'S INFERNO

Nine signs that February is going to hell. (Not including the usual burning sensation.)

1. Limbo

Dying to know which one of Eddie Murphy's characters in Norbit will earn him an Oscar nod? Your wait ends on January 22, when the nominations are announced. It happens early—5:30 A.M. PST—so Hollywood's brightest stars will want to set their alarms. Well, except for Jim Carrey. We saw The Number 23. He can sleep in.

2. The Lustful

Valentine's Day is on the way, and if you're not totally fucking bummed already, maybe this stat will help: According to a survey conducted by the American Kennel Club, 34 percent of women say that if their dog were a man, they'd want him as a boyfriend. Who knew the ability to lick your own genitalia made you a catch?

3. The Gluttonous

It's a true triumph for the sedentary! Now that Papa John's and Domino's have started taking delivery orders via text message, pigging out is as simple as registering online and sending a message like "FAV1" with your chubby little fingers. Tip enough and the stoned teenager who shows up at your door might even feed it to you.

4. The Greedy

Kiss likes money—their official Kiss Kasket was our first hint—but now they're making a most unholy union. Starting in March, the band will strap on their platform shoes to play 15 festivals organized around the Indy Car circuit. The good news: Kiss will get richer, and we'll finally get to see how a mullet looks with face paint.

5. The Sullen

Our troops have even more reason to be depressed now that they're all getting a free album called CD for the Troops. What's the rub? The compilation features artists like Josh Groban and Sarah McLachlan—not exactly the best way to get pumped up for a firefight. Download the shitasticness at aafes.com.

6. The Heretics

Bloody hell! Aston Martin, the classy car manufacturer preferred by James Bond, is planning to make a car outside the UK for the first time in 93 years. Lacking capacity in their English plant, the company is reportedly looking to expand manufacturing to somewhere else in Europe. Sean Connery must be rolling over in his grave.

7. The Violent

Our friends at Smith & Wesson (you'd call them that, too, with the arsenal they have) are bringing gunplay to lightweight new levels with their M&P45 polymer pistol. Marketed for law enforcement personnel, the $649 30 oz. plastic blaster boasts a 10+1 magazine capacity and three interchangeable rubber grips. Comfy!

8. The Fraudulent

When is a Ford Model Search total b.s.? When the contestants are virtual. Mariah Carey's new fragrance, "M," is teaming up with MTV to search for the world's first supermodel avatar. These virtual hotties will walk virtual runways, and the winner will become the face of The Virtual Hills. Now if you'll excuse us, we need a very real shot of whiskey.

9. The Traitors

Aging hippie Neil Young says he'll replace the engine in his 1959 Lincoln with an electric motor. Fine. But Arnold Schwarzenegger coughing up 40 grand to convert his gas-guzzling Wagoneer into a fuel-efficient biodiesel? That shit ain't right. Next we're going to find out he doesn't sexually harass women anymore!

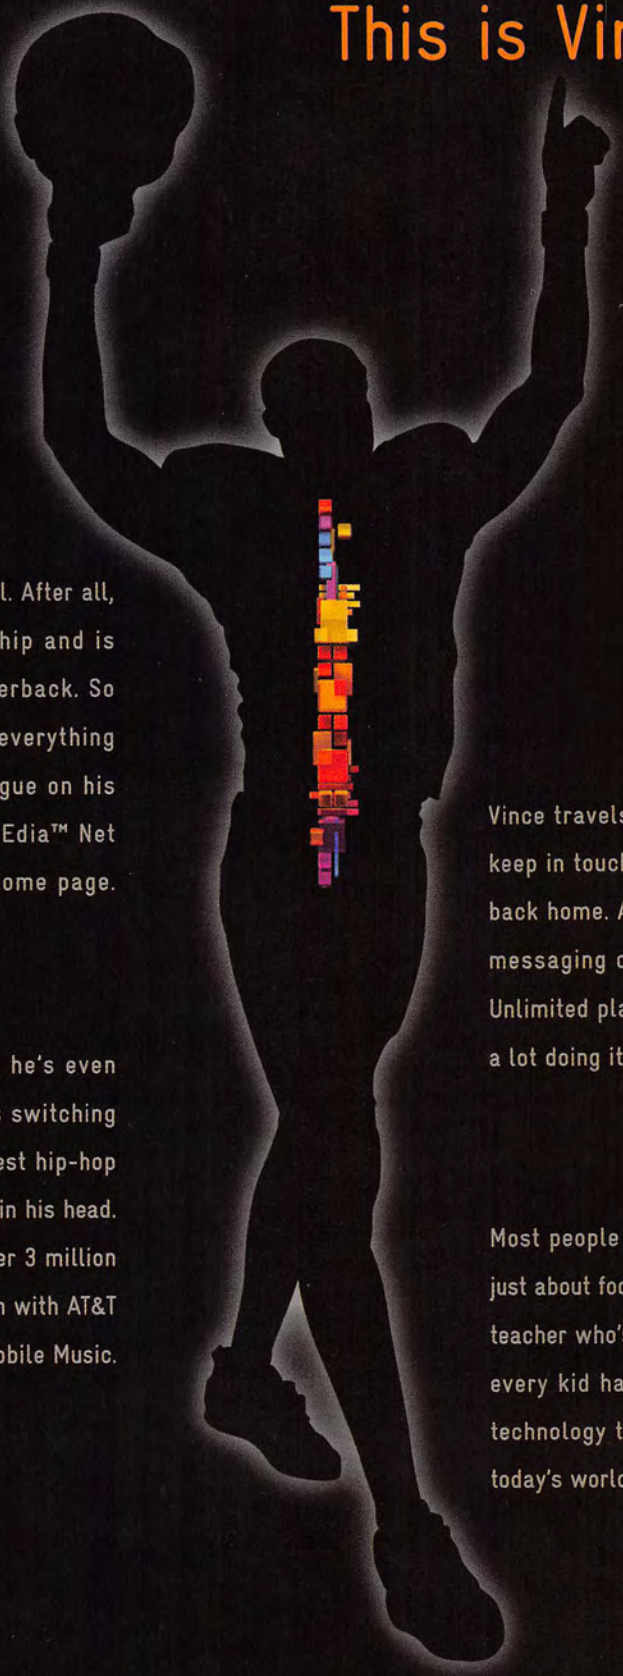
This is Vince Young.



Wireless Sports Updates

Of course Vince Young is into football. After all, he did win a college championship and is currently a starting pro quarterback. So you know he keeps up on everything happening in the league on his phone's MEdia™ Net home page.

Ringtones

As fast as he is on the field, he's even faster off it. Vince is always switching up his ringtone for the latest hip-hop track he's gotten stuck in his head. Luckily, he's got over 3 million to choose from with AT&T Mobile Music.

Picture Messaging

Vince travels for work. A lot. So he likes to keep in touch with his mother and friends back home. And with unlimited picture messaging on his MEdia™ Max Unlimited plan, he saves a lot doing it.

Me/Charity

Most people don't know that Vince isn't just about football. He's also a volunteer teacher who's working to make sure every kid has access to the technology that drives today's world.

He had the career, the wife, the kids, but somehow Tim felt adrift.

HOME, WEIRD HOME

In the future, we'll eat meals in pill form and live in absurd habitats.

Jelly-fish 45 Habitat

This semisubmerged dwelling designed by the Giancarlo Zema Design Group includes a kitchen, bathrooms, study rooms, bedrooms, a living room, and an underwater party room. It'll cost $2 million, but we think that's a price worth paying to get anyone who'd want to live in it away from the general population.

Fab Tree Hab

Lame-ass name? Check. So crazy it just might work? Check again. Dreamed up by engineers at MIT, the home is a living organism with walls made of interweaving vines, insulated with clay and straw. Bonus: The house will continue to grow over the years as your fat ass expands.

Luna Gaia

Space tourism can suck it. Why visit the moon when you and 11 friends could live on it? The Luna Gaia, designed by an international team of 30 scientists, will be almost entirely self-sufficient. Water will be purified by algae, carbon dioxide will be recycled, and food will be made from waste products. And you thought Tang tasted like shit.—Lisa Freedman

New York–based Sithophants are melting away flab by dueling with lightsabers. "It's no joke," insists the mono-named Flynn, the 37-year-old founder of New York Jedi's weekly fitness class. "We're doing cartwheels, flips, donkey kicks, and butterfly kicks, just like Darth Maul did." Check out hot pics at nyjedi.com. Sexual Sorcerers

Like it or not, magicians are the ultimate seduction machines. By Neil Strauss

Despite his creepy demeanor and the unsettling rape allegations against him, David Copperfield was once a chick magnet without peer. He bedded countless babes, and his former fiancée, supermodel Claudia Schiffer, reportedly nicknamed his penis "the Magic Wand." Meanwhile, David Blaine and Criss Angel—who has replaced the scandal-scarred Copperfield at the top of the magician food chain—are as famous for going out with models and actresses as for any of their tricks.

So does this mean we should all learn to levitate—or are magicians just more special than those of us with nothing up our sleeves besides excessive arm hair? The answer lies in the one trait that all successful magicians share: a desperate need for attention.

The desire to learn magic stems from an obsession with possessing powers ordinary people don't have. Mastering the right tricks can have a more powerful influence on people's perception of you than looks, money, or fame. Just look at what turning water into wine did for Jesus!

Illusions allow magicians to connect deeper than words. If David Blaine knows what number she's thinking of, then he must really understand her. And if Criss Angel can move a card without touching it, then imagine what he can do in bed.

Another reason magicians do so well is because most men tend to scoff at spirituality. But most women are looking for something more in this world. So until they find God, a dude who can levitate a cigarette will just have to do.

Neil Strauss just released a two-book set on seduction, Rules of the Game. Buy it; he needs the cash.

HELLFIRE!

Were the Malibu fires God's punishment for history's greatest concentration of debauchery?

For years Malibu has been known as something of an earthly paradise, a bucolic community overlooking the Pacific that celebrities have long made into their own personal playground. But recently the rich and famous have gone off the rails (Paris and Britney and Lindsay—oh, my!), turning it into a festering den of vice and iniquity. And the Man Upstairs ain't gonna take it anymore! An update:

1 Flea
Proving that God is no fan of funk-slapping, the Chili Peppers' bassist's home was destroyed in a blaze.

3 Charlie Sheen
The former hookers 'n' blow pro lives in a Malibu mansion, just like his character on Two and a Half Men!

5 Malibu Colony
Jim Carrey, Halle Berry, and Sting are among the celebs in this gated community. Hear that, burglars?

7 Starbucks
Britney's home away from home saw the pop tart famously peeling out with baby Preston on her lap.

9 Brody Jenner
"The Prince of Malibu" helped turn the town into a mecca for douchebags who say "bro" a lot.

11 David Geffen
The Hollywood bigshot had this beach to himself for years. The public got access in '05, so bring a cooler!

13 Suge Knight
The gangsta rap mogul put his pad on the market this year. We hear his neighbors were devastated!

15 Mel Gibson
After a night at Moonshadows restaurant, Gibson went on his infamous anti-Semitic tirade. Smell the hate!

2 Matthew McConaughey
Sweaty, bare-chested workout routines on the beach? Not gay at all, dude.

4 Polaroid Beach House
A pleasure palace for the rich and famous—so beware of paparazzi in the sand.

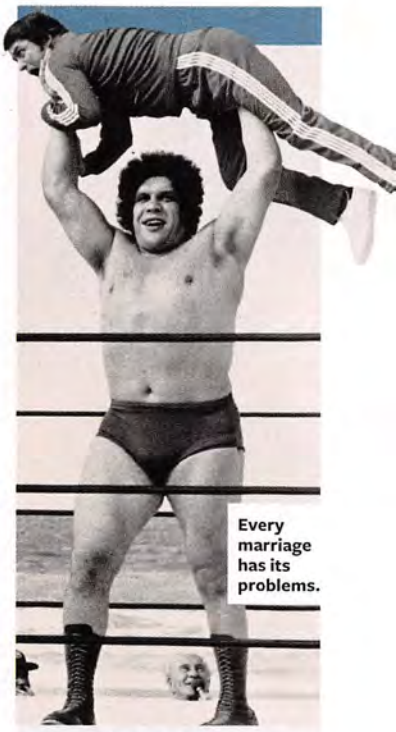
6 John McEnroe
The "Malibu Mob" hangs at John's place: Kid Rock, John Cusack, Laird Hamilton, and... Tony Danza. Hardcore.

8 The Malibu Inn
Kid Rock, Jeremy Piven, and Pam Anderson have been known to take the stage at this local dive bar.

10 Sean Penn
The insufferable Oscar winner's airstream trailer was destroyed in the fires. Perhaps there is a God?

12 Leonardo DiCaprio
This is one of Leo's three Malibu bachelor pads. OK, we get it—you're rich.

14 Promises
The fave rehab of the chemically challenged glitterati, including Britney, Lindsay, and Ben Affleck.



Every marriage has its problems.

Andre the Giant, by the Numbers

Still large and in charge.

The 74" pro wrestling icon's epic battles with Hulk Hogan made spandex short shorts badass, and his legacy continues to inspire today's aggro culture (see Obey Giant clothing line). On the 15th anniversary of his death, we drop digits on the gargantuan grappler's larger-than-life legend.

4 Men he chased to their car after they made fun of his size. He flipped it when they got in and locked the doors.

22 His shoe size. All the better to put one of those massive wrestling boots up your ass.

540 Pounds he weighed at his heaviest. Giants don't worry about carb intake.

7,000 Calories of alcohol he supposedly guzzled daily. See above number.

33,000,000 Viewers tuned in to his rematch with Hogan on NBC, making it the most-watched wrestling match ever.

If it seems like the world is getting slimier, well, that's because it is.

Why not tie the knot with the man who leaked "One Night in Paris"? Pammy announces the blessed nuptials with a blog posting titled "The Adventures of Scum and Pam Have Begun."

2 Crappy Souvenir
Attendees of the 2008 Olympics in Beijing can bring home supposedly odorless panda poop molded into tiny statues of "athletic pandas performing various Olympic sports." Fun!

3 Truly Bad Habit
Florida authorities investigate the use of "Jenkem," a drug made from fermented urine and feces. Also known as "butt hash," it causes hallucinations and bad breath. So we're told.

4 Staph Is No Laugh
Experts warn that deadly drug-resistant, flesh-eating staph infections are on the rise and could surpass AIDS in causing deaths. So wash your hands after touching those open sores.

5 Gross National Product

6 Bust a Nut
Ringwood, New Jersey officials warn against eating squirrels after lead was found in a dead one. They later admit it's a mistake, saying it's perfectly fine to dine on the rodents. Phew!

Bacon Porn

All hail chicken-fried bacon!

"Everyone has to try it once," claims Frank Sodolak, owner of Sodolak's Original Country Inn and inventor of these artery-clogging delights. Just don't plan on being alive for a second helping. Before dropping them into the deep fryer, the cooks at Sodolak's in Snook, Texas dip raw bacon into vats of chicken-fried steak batter. Kings would pay a fortune for this 1,500-calorie delicacy of six strips and a side of delicious gravy. For you? Try $5.50.

VANESSA HUDGENS

A sincere shout-out to our fave Disney damsel gone bad.

Dear Vanessa,

You are a freakin' genius. That racy nude Internet pic propelled you from being the High School Musical sweetheart that only little girls cared about (we're talking to you, Zac Efron) to one of the most searched for babes on the Web. Now if casting directors think you're too innocent to be in an R-rated movie, all they have to do is Google you to be proven wrong. And you didn't even have to make a sex tape!

We always knew you were more than just the latest Disney Channel cupcake served up for mass kiddie consumption. In 2003 you made your big-screen debut in the naughty Thirteen, in which Evan Rachel Wood gets her tongue pierced, does lots of drugs, and makes out with other girls. After you landed a starring role in the High School Musical franchise in 2006, you leveraged that job into a record deal and a lucrative gig as the face of Neutrogena. That's funny, because we are the face of loneliness!

Vanessa, you're totally cute. And we don't feel weird about saying that, seeing as you turned 19 on December 14. What is weird is that we celebrated your birthday by having a cake made and ate it by ourselves in our basement. Whatever, we're totally moving out of our parents' place pretty soon. So stay in touch, OK?

ASK MAXIM

The answers to your animal-fearing, nose-busting, penis-protecting questions. Plus, calculator trivia!

WHY DO CALCULATOR NUMBERS GO IN THE OPPOSITE ORDER OF DIGITS ON A PHONE?

Erik Brandweis, Providence, RI

That's like asking why anyone thinks Dane Cook is funny—no one's really sure. "We have a wealth of knowledge," says Meghan Henning, senior manager at the Consumer Electronics Association, "but nothing on this." According to a study published in the July 1960 issue of The Bell System Technical Journal, the current phone pad beat out 15 other arrangements in a series of tests of accuracy and speed. As for the calculator, in 1879 the first mechanical cash register had the 1 button on the bottom row. When the handheld electronic calculator came along in 1967, it made sense to keep the 1 where it was. Thanks for your question, Erik. Spending hours on the phone with electronics experts is the reason we started working at Maxim.

"Ease up on the O-negative, tubby."

WHAT'S THE DEADLIEST CREATURE ON EARTH?

Jason Vogel, Pittsburgh, PA

Believe it or not, the lowly mosquito causes 2.7 million painful deaths each year courtesy of the malaria virus carried in its saliva. How bad is malaria? "I went into a coma for three days, and they drained out all my blood and replaced it twice," says Reg Hoyt, professor of animal biotechnology at Delaware Valley College. Hoyt's hellish ordeal took place in Africa, where malaria continues to be a serious health epidemic. Meanwhile, America's most kill-crazy critter is the deer. Bambi routinely takes revenge for his murdered mother by killing about 150 people each year in car accidents. So go buy a shotgun, Jason, and thin the herd.

There was a Golden Girls marathon on that day.

Never touch Jughead's fries.

CAN I REALLY KILL SOMEONE WITH A PALM STRIKE TO THE NOSE?

Curtis Gunderson, Braintree, MA

Don't cry on your ninja costume, Curtis, but that's about as likely as you running up the Empire State Building, Parkour-style. Mike Tyson popularized this mythical death blow after knocking out Jesse Ferguson in 1986, when he said, "I always try to catch them right on the tip of the nose because I try to push the bone into the brain." But even Iron Mike in his heyday couldn't pull off this fancy kill shot. "Driving the nasal bones into the brain with a striking blow is the stuff of legends," scoffs Dr. Andrew Chang, maxillofacial surgeon at Scripps Memorial Hospital. Now go break the bad news to the rest of the dorks in your dojo, Curtis-san.

HOW MANY TIMES A DAY CAN I MASTURBATE BEFORE I HURT MYSELF?

William Price, Aurora, IL

While maniacal self-abuse has certain downsides (skin irritation, reduced sperm count, a completely freaked-out and disgusted girlfriend), there's no physical danger and only one real limiting factor. "There's a refractory period during which you cannot achieve another orgasm," says Dr. Steven Lamm, author of the best-selling boner guide The Hardness Factor. Your recovery time increases with age, so a frisky teenager with a copy of Two Chicks, One Dick can likely orgasm five times a day, while your lonely 50-year-old landlord might bust a nut only twice. For best results, don't wear an oven mitt. Trust us.

FLASHBACK OF THE TITANS

The original American Gladiators tell all about their crazy days of spandex-clad superstardom.

Does NBC's glitzy new American Gladiators make you nostalgic for the low-tech 1989–96 original? We tracked down our favorite brawlers and learned that, behind the scenes, life meant sex, drugs, and plenty of bandages.

Nitro (Dan Clark): At the tryouts they brought in these numbskull college kids. I pick one up and slam him to the concrete—out cold. I'm thinking, Shit, they're going to kick me off the lot. But the producer goes, "You got the job."

Laser (Jim Starr): When the show took off, I was on American Gladiators vitamin bottles. Mac and cheese. Gum. Balloons. I'm not bragging.

Nitro: We weren't getting a piece of merchandising. The extra money came from appearances—$10,000 to go to the Budweiser employee meeting. But sometimes they wanted me to wear the uniform. The jacket, sure, but I'm not putting on the spandex for some car show.

Hawk (Lee Reherman): We were together in close quarters, especially on road trips and tours. When you're sharing clothes, food, and workout routines, who's to say you're not going to share a bodily fluid or two?

Zap (Raye Hollitt): Half the team was lesbians at one time. But it was just women with women; there were no gay guys on that show.

Zap: There were a lot of drugs. When we were on top of each other on a tour bus, it was a free-for-all—Vicodin, Percocet... Half the Gladiators were on something for pain. You had to perform, especially on tour. And then you end up sleeping around. I had to go to rehab to get off the Vicodin.

Nitro: They tested us for steroids one year, I think just to say that they'd done it. But nobody ever told us what those results were.

—Brian and Andy Kamenetzky

For some reason, all of them requested cups.

LET'S BOUNCE

With the hyperrealistic Jumper, the superhero genre is growing up.

Director Doug Liman (Swingers, The Bourne Identitiy) doesn't think your favorite superhero movies are very realistic. "A 17-year-old with superpowers is going to put on a silly suit and fight crime?" The man has a point. In a world where the Man of Steel holds down a boring nine-to-five and Peter Parker won't divulge the one secret guaranteed to get him laid, the super among us can be pretty damn dull. So can a superhero movie succeed when logic isn't thrown out the window? According to the hotly anticipated Jumper, absolutely. When David Rice (Hayden Christensen) wakes up one day and realizes he can teleport, he doesn't start rescuing kittens from trees. Instead, our "hero" starts robbing banks. But like all badass superpowers, this one comes with a price, and soon David finds himself in the middle of an age-old war between jumpers and an organization—led by an awesomely white-haired Samuel L. Jackson—that has sworn to kill them. Jumper might have ditched the doting aunts and British butlers, but it still has what every superhero movie needs: stunning visual effects and, well, an even more stunning Rachel Bilson as David's girlfriend, Millie. It all makes for what could be a genre-changing recipe. "In my loftiest hopes," says Liman, "Jumper will make other superhero films feel as dated as Bourne Identity made other action films feel." —Mike Olson

When you karaoke with Vince, he always makes you sing the chick part.

Road Rage

This comedy doc proves that five guys shouldn't share one bathroom.

The stars of Vince Vaughn's Wild West Comedy Show: 30 Days and 30 Nights—Hollywood to the Heartland discuss male bonding.

Ahmed Ahmed: If you missed the bus, you had to find your own way to the next city. About halfway through, I overslept, so I had to chase the bus down. They were kind enough to stop and throw my ass in there.

John Caparulo: Five guys on a bus is like a rolling prison. It's a weird feeling, like you're being FedEx'd from city to city. At the end you're like, "It's cool I got to do that, but I never want to see those fucking people again."

Bret Ernst: We would sucker-punch each other in the face during interviews. It snowballed to where I beat Caparulo with a water bottle. We'd be right in the middle of the interview, and the next thing you know, boom!

Sebastian Maniscalco: After the shows these beautiful women would come up to me going, "You were fantastic!" I'd be like, "This is great!" But by the end of the conversation, they'd go, "Is Vince coming out?"

FERNANDA ROMERO

The Eye star gets her pants scared off on- and offscreen.

In this month's freaky new flick, The Eye, the adjacent Latin lovely gives her all. Specifically, her eyes. Fernanda plays a transplant donor who gives corneas —and the power to see into a supernatural world—to Jessica Alba. Wasn't that nice of her? Herewith, more fun Fernanda facts:

Fall From Grace
When I was 16, I was in this singing group called Fryzzby. Before one show —I have no idea why—they wet the floor. So I was dancing, and I completely slipped. I tried to fake like I was doing a Michael Jackson move, but of course, everyone made fun of me.

Video (Almost) Killed the Radio Star
I was in the Velvet Revolver video "She Builds Quick Machines," dressed as an angel, tied up and hanging in a barn. The band came to rescue me but forgot to undo my hands. They almost pulled my arms off. I was like, "Dude! I'm going to die in this video!"

GROUNDHOG DAY, AGAIN

In honor of its 15th-anniversary DVD, director Harold Ramis explains the far-reaching impact of his rodent opus.

1 | It's part of our language

"The movie is mentioned constantly to describe the déjà vu of boredom. In fact, it's in the Congressional Record. They were endlessly debating a bill on TV, and I turned around when I heard someone say, 'It's like Groundhog Day. We keep talking about the same thing.' I just heard it in the news the other day—military commanders were using it in reference to Iraq."

2 | Shrinks love it...

"Within the first few weeks of the movie's opening, I started hearing from psychologists and psychiatrists. As time passed, people would send me published works on the film. I got invitations to speak from the American Psychiatric Association, the Chicago Institute for Psychoanalysis...It was amazing. I heard from psychologists who use it with all their patients."

3 | ...and so does Hollywood

"It became a template for a new kind of screenwriting—a script that breaks all the rules but succeeds nonetheless. Steven Spielberg told me, 'I wish I'd made it.' Bill Murray was on Larry King a few years ago and said, 'It's probably the best work I'll ever do. And probably the best work Harold will ever do.' I was like, Gee, Bill, thanks for putting the cap on my career!"

4 | It leads to enlightenment

"Rabbis, Christian clergymen...I think everyone in the spiritual community believes that human beings are perfectible, and the movie—to some extent—shows how we can get to that place. I've heard people call it the greatest Buddhist movie ever made. The Dalai Lama hasn't seen it, though. His Holiness prefers nature films. He really liked March of the Penguins."

Looks like someone is allergic to shellfish!

Do the Robot

The cyborgs of The Sarah Connor Chronicles are wreaking sexy havoc.

Turns out the Terminator was promising more than just the annihilation of pesky humans when he uttered the catch phrase "I'll be back" 24 years ago. Besides establishing Arnold Schwarzenegger as a box office behemoth, the sci-fi classic spawned two blockbuster sequels, and now this thoroughly addictive Fox TV show.

Who cares that the last film pretty much nixed any possibility of a sequel? When time travel is involved, anything—including, yech, making out with your mom—is possible. The series, which takes place between T2: Judgment Day and T3: Rise of the Machines, features a constantly on-the-run Sarah and John Connor (Lena Headey and Thomas Dekker). Guiding the duo is Cameron (sexy Summer Glau), a new breed of good Terminator sent to protect the future leader of the human race from the 'borgs chasing him.

Replacing Arnold with a fembot isn't breaking new ground, but while Kristanna Loken's Terminatrix was silent and deadly in Rise, Glau's version is more user-friendly. Fans who fret that reducing the epic battle to the small screen will hinder the action should relax. "This Terminator is not a softer replacement; she's just different," Dekker says. "Arnold and Summer are like apples and oranges: a big hulking apple and a really hot orange." —Jesse Brukman

"No, Arnold, I don't want to touch your 'California raisins.'"

Speed Freak

A meth expert reviews Breaking Bad, a dramedy about a chem teacher gone wild.

Crystal meth is the devil drug of the moment, even more wack than crack, so AMC's new series about a high school chemistry teacher who becomes a meth cook may sound like a bad idea. Fortunately, Breaking Bad successfully melds drama and laughs to produce a great high. Malcolm in the Middle dad Bryan Cranston plays a middle-aged nebbish who solves his family's money woes by entering the meth manufacturing business with a former student. The show gets all the details of cooking the drug right: the gas masks, the round-bottomed flasks, the tedium of pouring, stirring, and straining the chemicals. To an outsider it can seem about as exciting as the periodic table, but to meth cooks it's a modern form of alchemy. "You're an artist," his partner says after sampling the top-notch speed the teacher produces. Cranston as the put-upon White is priceless, and the show is a touching portrait of a man going through the mother of all midlife crises.

Frank Owen is the author of No Speed Limit: The Highs and Lows of Meth.

GOT ANY DEATHBED CONFESSIONS?
Just before I croak, I'll call someone over and say, "I've never told this to anyone..." and die. They'll talk about me forever.

AS AN ADULT, WHAT DID YOU SPEND THE MOST MONEY ON?
Toys I never had as a kid, which I'd play with for 15 minutes before losing interest. Rock 'em Sock 'em Robots? Totally overrated.

WHAT'S YOUR BIGGEST REGRET?
Taping this girl Sarah's head in high school. I thought it'd be funny, but she cried. It still kind of bums me out.

WHAT WAS THE BEST MOMENT OF YOUR LIFE?
Quitting my job on April Fools' Day, because I like to think they were holding their breaths a bit, thinking I'd be back the next morning.

THE WORST?
Taping that girl's head, dude! How many times you gotta bring that up?

WHO GETS WHAT IN YOUR WILL?
My sister gets it all, and then it goes to the highest bidder on eBay.

SO NOW THAT YOU'RE MINUTES AWAY FROM DEATH, CAN YOU TELL US WHAT THE HELL IS GOING ON ON LOST?
Sorry, they can still get to me after death with that smoke thing in the woods.

HUSTLE AND FLOW

Miami's Rick Ross works the streets—again—on his new album, Trilla.

Rick Ross provided the soundtrack to the summer of 2006 with his smash, "Hustlin'," turning a simple jam about slangin' rock into an anthem for dealers and suburban brats alike. Though now tasked with following up Port of Miami, his platinum-selling debut, the hip-hop phenom isn't feeling the heat.

DO YOU FEEL COMPELLED TO PROVE YOU'RE MORE THAN A ONE-HIT WONDER?

Nah, I just want to expand and grow. I definitely talk for the hustlers, but there's more to it.

AND YOU'RE READY TO SHOW THAT OFF?

That's what Trilla gonna be. On Ready to Die, a lot of people ain't know how good of a rapper Biggie was. On Reasonable Doubt, a lot of people ain't know that Jay was gonna be the greatest. I know the game. I'm gonna keep going city to city with 80 chains on, repping the hood, repping the ghetto, repping the projects.

HOW WAS MAKING THIS ALBUM DIFFERENT THAN MAKING THE LAST?

On Port of Miami, I had beats sent to me. It made a difference to sit down with the producers, give them ideas, and have them structure the tracks around my vibe. We just grinding, man. Everything good out here in the streets.

YOU GOT JAY-Z TO COLLABORATE ON "MAYBACH MUSIC." ARE YOU TWO A FORMIDABLE PAIR?

It's like Michael Jackson and Paul McCartney fightin'. It's one of those records that's gonna be remembered for all time. It won't even do it no justice trying to describe it.

YOU AND FRANK GORE OF THE 49ERS OPENED A RESTAURANT CALLED THE HIP HOP GRUB SPOT. WHAT'S ON THE MENU?

It's really just bringing another opportunity to the hood, turning a vacant building into a spot where people can get jobs. It got plasmas, X-Boxes, PlayStations. Go there and eat a Rick Ross Boss Burger—it's that kind of vibe.

WHAT'S ON THE RICK ROSS BOSS BURGER?

A flame-broiled beef patty, BBQ sauce, and all that. It's something you gotta try.—Ben Detrick

For your aural satisfaction, here's what else is dropping this month.

The Mars Volta • The Bedlam in Goliath

Universal

With their howling vocals and guitar pyrotechnics, the Mars Volta have gone a long way toward rescuing prog rock from the music history bargain bin. While the band maintains the genre's requisite wankery and bombast, they create something new by folding in Latin, metal, and funk.—David Swanson

Vampire Weekend • Vampire Weekend

XL Recordings

On the strength of a three-song EP and a sound that's equal parts Afro-pop rhythm and jangle-rock melody, these Brooklynites were appropriately dubbed Indie It Band in 2007. Leave it to their self-titled debut LP—11 sunny pop songs that evoke Cape Cod and the Congo—to trump the hype.—D.S.

Music Math

Jack Johnson • Sleep Through the Static • Brushfire Records

Now that he's satisfied his curiosity about doing a cartoon soundtrack (Sing-a-longs and Lullabies for the Film Curious George), the Oahu native and former pro surfer is releasing his first proper album since '05. This time Jack is veering away from his usual brand of pleasant campfire anthems and acoustic chick rock with—gasp—electric guitars. Watch out, Eddie Van Halen.

The future of pop culture, filed and sorted for your anticipatory pleasure.

GET PSYCHED FOR

Metal Gear Solid 4: Guns of the Patriots

The now-elderly Solid Snake battles evil in this (supposedly) final installment of the wildly popular game series. Could your grandpa save the world with a weird eye-patch contraption? Didn't think so.

Reggae Rising Music Festival

Slip on your Birks and join 12,000 other neohippies for this three-day retreat along California's Redwood Coast that combines camping and live performances. The party is best experienced on the Eel River, so bring a raft.

Zack and Miri Make a Porno

Kevin Smith directs Seth Rogen and Elizabeth Banks as friends who make an adult film for cash. Rogen is always a grand slam, and Smith is a confirmed perv, so there should be no shortage of bump 'n' grind 'n' hilarity.

STAY AWAY FROM

A Day in Old New Castle

Unshowered masses flock to this Colonial fest to celebrate the glory of Delaware, our first and most boring state. Merriments include dances 'neath the Maypole and traditional Evensongs —all in the name of partying like it's 1799.

He's Just Not That Into You

Scarlett Johansson, Jennifer Connelly, and Jennifer Aniston in the same flick? Sounds seriously watchable—until you learn it's adapted from a self-help book for lovelorn women. Oh, and it gets worse: It costars Ben Affleck.

A New Beginning

Save the world from impending global-warming catastrophe with nothing but a Nintendo Wii thanks to this new "cinematic, interactive eco-thriller." Seems someone forgot video games exist so we can forget reality.

TIME WILL TELL

Indiana Jones and the Kingdom of the Crystal Skull

After 19 years, Steven Spielberg is bringing the fedora-wearing, snake-fearing archaeologist back to kick commie butt. Let's hope AARP member Harrison Ford cracks his whip instead of his hip.

Star Wars: The Clone Wars

Here's the animated TV show that confirms George Lucas' assertion that "Star Wars is not dead." Fusing elements of anime with 3-D computer-generated imagery, this stylized series sounds like it could almost make up for the prequels.

The Office spin-off

Failing to milk a successful franchise for all it's worth is downright un-American, so NBC plans to introduce new Office mates who'll eventually get their own show. Fingers crossed, but you can't Xerox Steve Carell.

AMERICA'S FERRARI KILLER

The ZR1, Chevy's fastest Vette ever, preps for battle at 200 mph.

Much like the presence of non-mental cases in the Detroit Lions front office, the existence of the Corvette ZR1 has been a much-hyped Motor City rumor for years. This summer the rumor will become supercar reality when the Vette streaks off the line on its way to a top speed of more than 200 mph. The limited-edition über-Chevy won't be cheap; word is each of the 2,000 or so set for production will carry a sticker price close to six figures. But if its mouth-watering spec sheet bears out, the track-tuned, Le Mans–inspired ZR1 will be sure to land Chevy a high-speed audience with Europe's vaunted speed demons—and at a price rivaling an Italian media mogul's annual Cialis budget.

BY MIKE SPINELLI

Power Plant

Meet Corvette's most powerful motor ever: the new LS9. The hand-assembled small-block V-8 is topped off with a Roots-type supercharger and air-cooling system, providing a neck-snapping range of rpm boost. The setup generates a tanklike 595 lb.-ft. of torque—enough to shred tires like they're CIA documents.

Pickup Window

What's the sense in having all that firepower if you can't show it off? Since the blower doesn't stick conspicuously through the hood like on a drag car, Chevrolet added a polycarbonate window so bystanders can eyeball the monster at rest. Unfortunately, the LS9's pizza-warmer of an engine cover keeps the interesting stuff under wraps.

Transmission

The task of transferring the power of all those ponies to the ZR1's steamroller-size rubber is left to an all-new close-ratio six-speed manual tranny. Two clutch disks dissipate heat and make shifting effortless even for drivers with celery-stalk calves. The result? You can cruise the mall parking lot without careening into crowds of toddlers.

SPEC CHECK

Price: Under $100,000
Engine: Supercharged 6.2L V-8
Horsepower: 650
0–60 mph: Under 3.5 seconds
Available: Summer 2008

Big Brakes

Peeking through 20-spoke rims are a set of carbon-ceramic brake rotors. A $17,000 option on the Ferrari F430, these light, heat-resistant stoppers come standard on the ZR1. Considering they generate enough heat to keep the grills running at every Denny's in Dearborn, deep front vents were designed to prevent nuclear fusion.

Huge Loss

This Vette's weight-loss plan consisted mainly of strategically replacing a few sheet-metal sections with carbon fiber. The material supershizzles the vented front fenders, roof, roof bow, rocker molding, and front air splitter. All told, the ZR1 weighs in at a svelte 3,350 pounds—321 pounds lighter than the Lambo LP640. Fat-ass.

Wind Breaker

The Corvette racing team excels in Europe's premier racing events and has won its class five times at Le Mans since 2000. Chevy's sports cars are enjoying the trickle-down effect. The ZR1 gets a race-inspired aerodynamics kit with the front air splitter and a rear spoiler that provide down force to keep it from entering restricted airspace.

MICRO MACHINES

Are new travel-friendly, ultramobile PCs worthwhile substitutes for larger laptops? To find out, we sent staffers on the road to Web-surf, e-mail, and watch videos—then use the tiny machines to report back.

1 Pocket Rocket
Nokia N810 $480

Lowdown: This über-cellphone—minus the "phone" part—has tons of tech goodies shoehorned into its dry-humpable brushed metal body. Our faves? The slide-out keyboard, Skype-friendly cam, and GPS.
Specs: 400 MHz processor; 2 GB memory, expandable to 8 GB; 4:05 battery life (as tested)
Logging on: Contributing editor Ky Henderson powered on, found a wi-fi network, and was NSFWing on the Mozilla browser in three minutes. "Ogling women at the Denver airport is far easier this way."
E-mailing: The downside of being the smallest model in this contest? A puny keyboard that makes typing a challenge. "Writing this ssnetences would take foreverr if i borth-erd with spelling.." That attitude is what also makes him a great editor.
YouTubin': The bright four-inch screen was surprisingly easy on the eyes, but choppy vids were a bummer. "The Dramatic Chipmunk looks like a Dyspeptic Chipmunk."
Verdict: It won't totally replace a laptop, but it's amazing for its size.

RATING ●●●●○

2 The Swinger
Fujitsu U810 $999

Lowdown: This combo tablet-notebook is more flexible than a Romanian gymnast thanks to its swivel touchscreen. A full version of Vista helps you complete your TPS reports from the road. Or jail.
Specs: Intel 800 MHz processor, 1 GB RAM, 40 GB HD, 5:15 battery life
Logging on: After waiting out Vista's lagging start-up, associate editor Jeff Foss quickly hopped onto a hot spot and started Googling ex-girlfriends using the stylus and screen alone. "The future is now!" he explained.
E-mailing: Double-mapping gives the keys a big surface area, and the tester claims scribing an e-mail to us from Lucy's bar was easy. We'll take his word for it because he left it there when he stumbled home.
YouTubin': Choppy playback of a hazy Hall & Oates video improved dramatically after switching off Vista's performance-marring extras. But "the tinny speaker is a killer." H&O deserve better.
Verdict: Whether you're doing real work or not, it's a road warrior.

RATING ●●●●◐

3 Geek's Choice
Asus Eee PC $400

Lowdown: About the size of the hollowed-out hotel room Bible you keep your weed in, this lappy's flash storage slims it down to less than two pounds. Plus, a Linux-based OS keeps the price point to four bennies. Suck it, Bill Gates!
Specs: Mobile Intel Celeron processor, 512 MB RAM, 4 GB internal storage, 3:31 battery life
Logging on: The stripped-down OS makes start-ups quick: Associate editor Jesse Will was stealing a signal in a minute and a half, then used the included Firefox browser to check out mihummel.com—seriously, we checked. Present for Mom? Sure, buddy.
E-mailing: He sent us this dispatch: "It feels like a toy, but I'm impressed with the speed. I'd even leave the MacBook at home. Plus, it fits perfectly in my man purse."
YouTubin': Watching Boys on Wheels sing "My Balls Are OK" was, according to him, "a true pleasure. Flawless even in full screen."
Verdict: She ain't much of a looker, but she's cheap and can cook.

RATING ●●●●○

4 Sexy Beast
Sony UX $2,500

Lowdown: Its slick sliding-screen design looks like a Sidekick on a Bondsian 'roid binge, while inside there's a full-on Vista-powered PC with a major case of shrinkage. It boasts two cams—one for video conferencing, one for shirtless Facebook pics. Poke this, ladies!
Specs: Intel Core 2 Solo processor, 1 GB RAM, 48 GB solid-state drive, 3:25 battery life
Logging on: After booting up to a foreboding "Error Recovery" screen, then waiting more than two minutes for Vista to load, intern Blaine McEvoy connected to a network in an airport bar. "By the time I got on the Web, I was ordering my second mud slide."
E-mailing: Tic Tac–size keys proved problematic. "I wish I had Oompa Loompa hands." More bad news: The machine crashed twice.
YouTubin': "So many frames were dropped in R. Kelly's 'Trapped in the Closet' that it looked like a madman's PowerPoint slide show."
Verdict: It's a fashion accessory: chic and sleek, but painfully slow.

ROLL PLAY

Get in her backyard by giving the gift of bocce.

Tackle football caused unsightly contusions, and lawn darts nearly killed her. So bring casual competition back into your relationship by introducing her to the ancient (but newly hip) sport of bocce. The key? Present her with the finest balls on Earth, a pro set by famed Italian firm Perfetta. Their solid composite resin spheres are laser-etched and guaranteed not to break for 10 years. Eight balls are included, along with a two-inch white pallino and a carrying case. To play, pitch the pallino and take turns lobbing the lovely orbs at it. You score points for every ball that's closer to the target than your opponent's. Maybe she'll even let you win. $200, dwr.com

SMART AX

The electric guitar gets even electricker with a built-in motorized autotuner.

Guitar strings routinely get mauled by fingers smeared with sweat, Cheetos crumbs, and groupie fluids. Factor in collisions with amps and band mates, and even premium axes go out of key fast. Enter the Gibson Robot Guitar, a newfangled self-tuning model with plenty of vintage style.

Neck CPU Tucked safely away from where you stick your lit Lucky Strike, a tiny CPU receives individual string data from the body and distributes it in real time to the corresponding pegs. By the time it's your turn to solo on "Greensleeves," your ax will be ready to rock.

Tailpiece This shiny number houses the strings inside ceramic insulators that isolate vibrations. This allows sensors to determine the pitch and transmit data to a CPU in the guitar's body. The result is a guitar that tunes in less than 10 seconds—faster than you can say, "But she said she was 18!"

Tuners A wet dream for any guitarist who's sat onstage staring at a tuner while the crowd hurled beer bottles, these motorized pegs wind the strings into tune in seconds. When you change a string, it's tightened to the correct pitch.

Master Control Knob Turn the dial and the pegs rotate until they're locked into one of six preset tunings (the Stones' "open G," Zeppelin's "DADGAD," standard, etc.). Indie rockers, take note: The presets can also be effed up to match weirdo Sonic Youth configurations.

Design Instead of concocting a futuristic body, engineers married innovation with old-school curves. The "nitrocellulose" Blue Silverburst finish will be one of the only giveaways you're playing a Robot Guitar. Plus the fact that, for once, you don't sound awful. $2,499, gibson.com

LES PAUL BUILT HIS FIRST ELECTRIC GUITAR IN 1941 OUT OF TELEPHONE PARTS AND A WOOD POLE.

Pick It or Leave It?

The Strokes' Albert Hammond Jr. lays down a few licks on the Robot Guitar.

"A guitar is a piece of art, and this is very beautiful except for the bulky headstock. It's fun to play with—though I can tune faster by ear—but beginners really have to learn how to tune. Still, maybe some kid will write the next great song using this fucking guitar."

KING OF THE CASTLE

Wu-Tang Clan's GZA will thrill you on the mike, then kill you on the chessboard.

YOU WU-TANGERS SPEND A FAIR AMOUNT OF TIME IN FRONT OF CHESSBOARDS. WHAT'S YOUR CRAZIEST MATCH?
One time I played Masta Killa 78 matches in a row. It was an all-night event. All told, I think he had me by two games. I'm not gonna play just once, you kidding?

WHERE DO YOU PLAY?
I play at home, abroad, in chess shops. I skip meals to play. In the studio, I'll sit and play for six hours instead of finishing a song. At home, a lot of time I'm playing on Yahoo! I play like 30 games every time I go online.

SO YOU HAVE TONS OF INTERNET PALS?
Ha. It's funny 'cause it's up close and personal but not; everybody talks smack to each other online. I get under my opponent's skin. Sometimes I'll rhyme at them. You gotta be creative with it, though, because you can't say shit or fuck. At some point Yahoo! banned profanity. Dick is still OK, though.

DO YOU COLLECT BOARDS?
I play on tournament mats, but I like all kinds of boards. The bigger, the better. Well, I take that back. I played on a 10'x10' chessboard at a hotel in Miami. The pieces were heavy, and I got tired just making a move. Not cool with that.

DOES BATTLING ON THE MIKE HAVE ANYTHING IN COMMON WITH PLAYING CHESS?
Of course. Like MCs, each chess player has his own style: how he likes to open, when he likes to attack. Just like we face off with each other lyrically, we challenge each other's minds on the chessboard. Sharpen each other's swords.

EVER SMOKED WEED BEFORE PLAYING?
I used to like to. Then again, I used to like to smoke half a blunt and read the same page of a book eight times in a row. It's a different level of analysis, I guess you could say.

SUFFER ANY TOUGH LOSSES?
Last October I played RZA for the Hip-Hop Chess Federation championship. I blundered. And once I played a Grandmaster, Maurice Ashley. Someday I would like to play Kasparov.

COULD YOU BEAT HIM?
What do you think?

"Knight to Queen 3. Bishop to Queen's Rook 7. My foot to your ass."

Risky Business

Having sex in public is dangerous, dirty, and impolite. And, for many women, the biggest turn-on.

At 1 P.M. on a boring workday, Jane, a 30-year-old writer, and her boyfriend began exchanging dirty e-mails. After an hour, it got so hot they decided to meet for a quickie. But not at home, or even a hotel. Instead, they went to a seedy bar in midtown Manhattan and headed straight for the ladies' room. In the midst of their tryst—pants around the ankles and Jane bent against the wall—the door burst open. "You ought to be ashamed!" a surly barmaid screamed. As they collected themselves and slunk out the door (rather, were kicked out—for good), the last words they heard were, "Get some self-respect!"

"It was humiliating," says Jane.* "It was kind of dirty. But it was totally worth it." In other words, the feeling of uncontrollable lust, coupled with the fear of getting caught, topped the few minutes of being berated by a cranky puritan. Yes, having sex in public means you risk mortification (and sometimes arrest), but interviews with dozens of women revealed that the risk is a huge part of the reason public sex is so hot. According to sex therapist Ian Kerner, Ph.D., the rush that comes from the possibility of getting caught stimulates the brain's production of dopamine—the chemical that gives us a natural high.

And it turns out everyone is doing it. A 2004 ABC News poll of 1,500 men and women showed that 57 percent of respondents admitted to having sex in a public space. But what exactly constitutes "public sex"? Definitions—and danger levels—vary wildly. It's not just about where the deed takes place, but how it makes us feel. Each type brings its own rewards—whether it's making sex just a little spicier or making you feel like a porn star. Which kind your woman dabbles in says a lot about who she is behind closed doors.

Secret Public Sex: Comfort Zone

For some of us, a little flirtation with exhibitionism goes a long way—say, doing it in a car parked down a dark alley. The fear of getting busted makes for faster, hotter sex, but we don't actually want to get caught. Instead, much of the appeal comes from the taboo of having sex somewhere society says you're not supposed to, even if it's relatively isolated. "I had sex with a coworker on an abandoned floor in our office building," says Kerry, 26. "We found a room that still had a desk in it, and he just unbuttoned my pants and bent me over it. We wanted privacy, but the idea that a custodian or, God forbid, another coworker could've stumbled upon us really upped the ante." Plus, Kerry says, doing it in the office just felt awesomely kinky. "Our coworkers sitting all buttoned up at their computers had no idea we were screwing just a few floors away."

The same is often true of sex outdoors. Even if you're in the middle of nowhere, the location alone can make it extra hot. According to Kara, 27, who's had sex while hiking with boyfriends, being out in the open feels totally uninhibited. "It sounds cheesy, but feeling the wind on your skin is exhilarating. And it's sort of animalistic—you're just outside, fucking."

Tara, 30, agrees. When she and her boyfriend had sex in the woods, they made sure no one was around to bust them. But just being out in nature provided all the excitement they needed. "We pulled the car in behind some trees and climbed onto the hood," she says. "Seeing his O face on top of me with nothing but blue ➤➤

*SOME NAMES HAVE BEEN CHANGED.

Best. Family road trip. Ever.

sky behind him was one of the hottest things we've ever done." But even if you've chosen a secluded spot, there's still a sense that someone could appear at any moment. And that panicky, stressful feeling feeds into your sexual arousal, most women agree. It's like getting a turbo boost of adrenaline and pleasure.

Steffanie, 24, prefers her outdoor sex to take place on city rooftops. "Looking down at passing cars or people, knowing you're doing something naughty they can't see, even though you can see them, is such a turn-on," she says. "It's like reverse voyeurism." Of course, in some cities, one man's secluded roof is another man's view, so if you're going to take that chance, be sure to scan nearby windows for gawkers.

Risky Public Sex: Hot Zone

Some women don't want their public escapades to be entirely secret. They need people around to raise the stakes. That explains why Laura, 29, would do it under a blanket in the middle of a crowded park. "People were walking all around us," she recalls. "I was on my side pretending to read a magazine, and he acted like he was just spooning me. No one knew he was quietly inside me, which made it amazing.

> "I'VE DONE IT IN MOVIE THEATERS AND PARKS, HOPING TO BE SEEN."

We couldn't even let out a tiny moan or we would've been busted."

And most women love the idea that their man has to have them right then, no matter how many people are around. "It's all about the quick and horny 'I want you so bad, I need you right now' mentality," says Gwen, 32, who's had sex in such fun-filled locales as elevators and restaurants. "It's amazing to feel so sexy and wanted." Bottom line: It's an incredible turn-on to feel like you can't wait until we get home to get in our pants—and you don't care who knows it. Jenn, 29, especially likes to do it in bar bathrooms for that reason. "If someone's waiting, you have to be willing to put up with some glares when you come out," she says. "But it just makes the whole experience cooler knowing they were forced to think about what you were doing in there."

"I like to imagine other people are watching me and are jealous of my sex life," explains Meghan, 26. "I've done it in movie theaters and in parks up against a tree, hoping I could be seen. I don't really want to know if anybody's watching, but it's part of my fantasy to think that someone, somewhere is looking at me and getting turned on." See, with public sex, we can act out some of our secret porn fantasies without having to actually lose our dignity (and all our pubic hair) by becoming real porn stars. It's like the home lap dance—your girlfriend likes to play stripper for you, but presumably she doesn't want to pole-dance for bucks in real life. (And if she does, well, kudos.)

Extreme Public Sex: Danger Zone

Then there are the pure daredevils who do want to know that people are watching. Some of these girls simply thrive on exhibitionism. "The idea of getting caught while you're in submission is a powerful stimulator," says Kerner. "It gives a true jolt of thrill-seeking amphetamine to our systems. It's also an adventure, which is alluring." Jill, 30, says the riskiest sex she ever had was when a boyfriend went down on her in a packed bar. "We were in the last booth, so we were kind of hidden," she says. Still, when the bartender went back for ice and caught them, she says it enhanced the act. "We locked eyes, and he almost seemed to want to watch," she says. "Sometimes, when I'm having sex, I still picture that guy watching me."

When 25-year-old Nancy and her fiancé did it on a bus in Brussels, she realized the appeal of having an audience. In the back row, she sat facing forward on his lap, her skirt lifted just enough so that they could maneuver. "When I noticed the driver looking in his rearview mirror a few times and enjoying the show, it just took the whole experience to another level. I felt like a total sex object—in a good way."

Other women gravitate toward really daring sex because it's liberating. "I'm a pretty timid person," says Marlene, 27. "But when it comes to sex, I become someone else. It's the one area of my life where I feel like it's OK to be aggressive and a little outrageous. And when I see how excited men get when I do something really ballsy, it makes me feel powerful." Her most memorable sexual exploit? The time she pulled a boyfriend into a dressing room at the Gap. "I told the attendant I needed his opinion. I couldn't believe she let him in with me. He watched in the mirror as I gave him head."

At the extreme end of the spectrum, however, are girls whose public adventures get them in trouble all the time. People who are constantly getting kicked off of airplanes and banned from bars for exposing their naughty bits probably have more than just a mild fetish. "Extreme exhibitionism is a cry for attention," notes Kerner. In other words, beware the girl who pushes the envelope too far. The last thing you need is to call a buddy for bail money because she had you two screwing on a jungle gym. During recess.

STYLING, ELLE STRAUSS FOR BA-REPS.COM; HAIR, JACQUELINE BUSH; MAKEUP, MARTIN

Get Out, Get Off

Sure, the adrenaline rush that comes with public sex makes it thrilling, but, chemical reactions aside, the biggest reason most women told me they loved doing it was the fact that you want to do it. Nothing's sexier than hearing you whisper that you want to sleep with us when we're at a crowded party, stuck at a boring play, or even just walking through a park. It's the ultimate compliment, and you know we're total suckers for those.

Still, if you haven't taken sex outside of the box yet and fear your girl won't be into it, start off light to make sure she's comfortable. Try a place where there's guaranteed privacy—behind a locked door at a party, or even in your own backyard. And make sure she's wearing a skirt or dress, in case you need to make a speedy escape. Nothing spells disaster more than having to run down the street pulling your buttonfly jeans up from around your ankles after some guy on a bike rides by. Trust me. ●

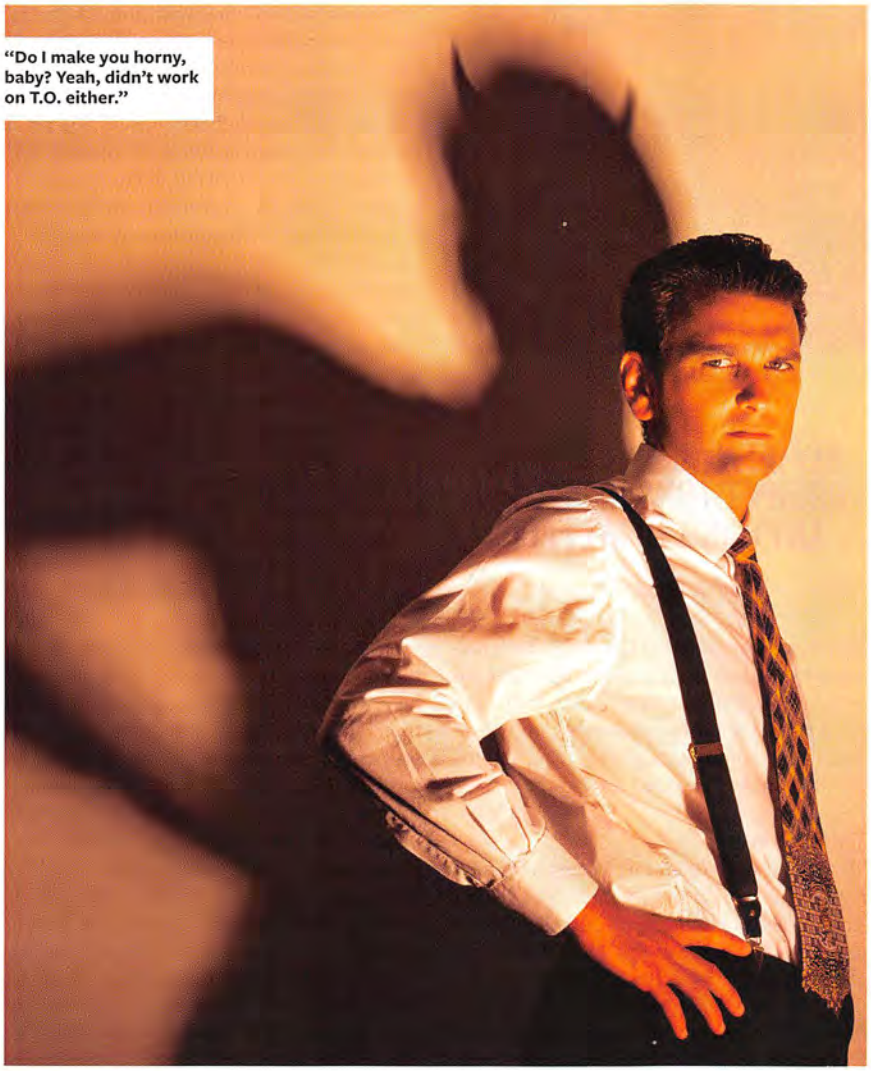
Sympathy for the Devil

Is notorious agent Drew Rosenhaus the villain of the NFL? Or just a geek in wolf's clothing?



"Do I make you horny, baby? Yeah, didn't work on T.O. either."

As soon as his plane hits the Pittsburgh tarmac at 2:20 P.M. on a gray November Monday, Drew Rosenhaus calls to make sure we're waiting at the Hertz counter. By 2:45 we're rushing along Highway 279 in a Ford Escape, headed for Heinz Field, where the Steelers will soon take on the Ravens. Rosenhaus, the world's most notorious sports agent, represents major players on both teams. In the passenger seat, he sends text messages with the dexterity of a 15-year-old girl while talking into the wired headset that dangles from his right ear. These devices ring and vibrate with a persistence matched only by the nasal hammering of his voice.

Rosenhaus never stops talking. During the 30-minute drive, he speaks with at least three clients, leaves two messages for a Dr. Lombardo, closes a two-year contract extension with $10 million in new money for a receiver you've never heard of, then calls the receiver to pitch the deal. "We're not a starter, and we're not a free agent. Looking at our stats, this deal is a spectacular accomplishment for us." Pause. "If you get 1,000 yards receiving? Sure, you'll get a new contract."

Rosenhaus is on a mission, has been for the past 19 years. Though he is not an NFL player, team owner, or coach, he is well en route to becoming the most powerful agent in the sport. In 1995 he told the Fort Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel that his goal was to represent 100 players so he could "control whether some teams win or lose." Now, 13 years later, he represents 97 (dozens more than any other agent), including some of the league's top marketing draws. "In terms of determining who wins or loses," he says, listing trades and signings that have changed the competitive face of the league, "that's a reality."

In other words, when you tune in to the Super Bowl this month, there will be a man behind the scenes who believes he is controlling the game to some degree—like a little kid moving toy players around a make-believe field. This off-season, Rosenhaus' list of clients will continue to grow, meaning his influence will only rise next year. It also means the questions that have long surrounded him will reach a fever pitch: Is he saving the NFL? Or is he destroying it?

The Hating Game

He is not a beloved figure. A Google search for "Drew Rosenhaus" and "asshole" generates 1,460 hits. "Rosenhaus should do us all a favor and die," reads one post. On urbandictionary.com, his name is invoked to illustrate the definition of "douchebag." But no one hates him as much as his peers. Fellow agents have called him a sleazeball and scumbag. "He doesn't give a shit," says one rival, who asked not to be named. "He's flamboyant as hell. He feels he's Teflon. He feels nobody can touch him."

Rosenhaus is the first celebrity sports agent, famous enough to star in his own Burger King commercial. In his 19 years in business, the 41-year-old has negotiated more than $1 billion worth of contracts. This coming off-season, he plans to handle another $500 million. Every day, he wakes up alone in the Miami Beach mansion he bought from client Warren Sapp. Outside a 34-foot sport boat sits idle, like the Maserati coupe that languishes in the garage until the next time he needs to impress a woman. "I'm more of a Dodge Ram guy," he says. "After I've gone out with them a couple of times, they get in the truck." He recently broke up with a 21-year-old cheerleader and law student ▶▶ who tolerated his lifestyle for six months before realizing it would never get better.

Growing up in a country club family in Miami, Rosenhaus had two obsessions: the Dolphins and comic books. His father, Robert, was an entrepreneur who encouraged him and his younger brother, Jason, to play football. But Rosenhaus was more interested in karate and comic books. He still makes frequent references to Batman and Spider-Man.

From 1984 to 1987, Rosenhaus attended the University of Miami, where he tutored football players during the Hurricanes' heyday. He became a man-groupie to guys like future Hall of Famer Michael Irvin, who led him to his calling. "You're a smart guy," Rosenhaus recalls Irvin saying. "I'm not crazy about the agents I'm talking to. I wish you were an agent." Rosenhaus took Irvin's advice and hasn't looked back.

In 1989, during his second year at Duke Law School, Rosenhaus invited ESPN to film contract negotiations for his first client—Robert Massey, a defensive back out of North Carolina Central who went to the Saints in the second round. By 1997, he'd penned an autobiography, A Shark Never Sleeps, in which he boasted of bluffing teams, manipulating the media, and picking fights with rivals. "I drooled at the thought of being able to pummel his face into the frozen dirt," he wrote of an unnamed competitor, describing a confrontation at the 1995 combine in Indianapolis. "I wanted red snow."

"MY COWARDLY, WEEPING COMPETITORS NEVER SAY ANYTHING TO MY FACE."

The Player

"That stuff is so outdated," Rosenhaus says now of his early indiscretions. "When I got started, there was more of a need to distinguish myself from my competitors. That's all changed. There's nothing villainous about me."

Before the Monday night game, we stop at the Omni to see one of Rosenhaus' players. Gliding into the lobby, the agent is immediately recognized. He stands six feet tall in boots, designer jeans, and a black leather jacket. Outsize pecs poke through his white T-shirt, flanking the S in the Rosenhaus Sports Representation logo, modeled on Superman's S. Rosenhaus is not exactly hiding his Superidentity.

Upstairs, Ravens running back Willis McGahee greets Rosenhaus with a thug-hug, then pokes his pecs and makes a face. Rosenhaus starts to make excuses but McGahee laughs it off. (Every summer Rosenhaus holds workouts with his clients where they lift weights and run wind sprints.) McGahee was a potential number-one overall pick coming out of Miami until he suffered a catastrophic knee injury in 2003, which could have pushed him into the third round. While he rehabbed, Rosenhaus ran a publicity campaign claiming his client would be ready to practice that fall. Then, at the draft, he phoned McGahee—who was sitting next to him—to create the illusion teams were calling. The Buffalo Bills picked him 23rd overall, and he was on the field before the end of the year.

Scooting away from a stack of cash on the table, I ask McGahee to explain his choice in agents. He speaks calmly while dressing, clearly a man used to being questioned in his underwear. "Drew was like a little kid," he says, grinning. "He was like one of us, always working out, playing video games. I liked being around him and his brother. They made me laugh."

Every one of Rosenhaus' players said the same thing: Their agent gets a bad rap. "People stereotype agents as money-grubbing guys," says Lawrence Timmons, a rookie linebacker with the Steelers. "But when you see the guy for yourself, you see how he is." Why wouldn't his clients love him? He pumps muscle into their paychecks. As for Rosenhaus, there's an element of hero-worship in play. The kid playing with toys is now surrounded by flesh-and-bone star athletes. As Rosenhaus juggles his phones, we hear him reinforce Kellen Winslow's ego after the Browns tight end caught 11 balls with a dislocated shoulder. He reminds Panthers center Justin Hartwig that playing through a broken thumb will improve his negotiating leverage. He seems to need the players as much as they need him. "These are my brothers. It's no longer just Batman," he says, referring to himself. "It's Batman, Robin, Nighthawk, and Batgirl."

Control Freak

Rosenhaus' rivals see another side. They claim he pilfers clients, an act punishable by the NFL Players Association. Last October, for example, Chicago Bears receiver Bernard Berrian heard a rumor that his agent was to be suspended, so he switched to Rosenhaus—but it turned out the rumor was false. Rosenhaus denied involvement, but Berrian didn't go back, so suspicious types put two and two together. Excuses, says Rosenhaus. "When you lose players, it's because you're not doing a good enough job."

Fans are more concerned with Rosenhaus' reputation for engineering holdouts, cemented when eight of his biggest clients threatened to skip minicamp as leverage for new contracts in 2005. In Green Bay, Brett Favre publicly called on receiver Javon Walker to get a new agent. In Philadelphia, Terrell Owens reported for camp only to take verbal jabs at owners and teammates. After a fight with retired Eagle Hugh Douglas, Owens was effectively fired by the team. Rosenhaus backed him in an emotional rant at the now-infamous "next question" press conference (YouTube it). "It was a circus act," says Mark Lepselter, who once lost a client to Rosenhaus. "Send in the clowns. The whole thing was pathetic."

As for Rosenhaus' ability to control games, his top 53 players could probably crush the Patriots. He represents Bears linebacker Lance Briggs—about to become a free agent—and Berrian, Winslow, and Cowboys running back Marion Barber. He's also got Bengals wide receiver Chad Johnson, rumored to be mulling a trade request to a team in a larger market. Rosenhaus can influence to a large degree which player goes to which team. Thus, he can tip the balance of power from one team to another.

Team executives understand his clout. "If the agent represents multiple players on the team, you want to make sure you're not burning any bridges for the next negotiations," says Cliff Stein, lead negotiator for the Chicago Bears. Another agent puts it more bluntly: "You're never going to get a club to say the truth about Drew Rosenhaus, because they're going to have to deal with him at some time. They'll tell me he's an asshole, then next time they see him they're buddying up to him."

"As far as the weeping competitors that I consistently knock the crap out of," Rosenhaus says, "it only motivates me more when they whine and make excuses. It's so cowardly to take these shots. They never say anything to my face. It doesn't make any sense. I'm one of the guys who has done the most for the profession over the past 20 years." Asked how he has changed his industry, Rosenhaus settles on the obvious: "I'm not sure there was a face to the business before me. Whether people think it's good or bad, now there is."

Kick Off

Now picture Rosenhaus as he stalks the Pittsburgh sideline before kickoff, peering over the security guard standing between him and the Steelers bench. From the line of Steelers jogging onto the field, cornerback Bryant McFadden calls Rosenhaus' name, forcing the guard to step aside, demoralized. Player and agent embrace, shouting in each other's ears. As McFadden trots off, Rosenhaus beams. "By far the coolest thing for a guy like me is to be down on the field before the games," he says. "I adore the athletes. They remind me of superheroes: the size, the strength, the explosiveness. I do find myself wanting to be like them."

The players love their agent. Everyone else hates him. Who is the real Drew Rosenhaus? Let us clear this up: He's actually an overgrown nerd. He's really Batman and Robin and Nighthawk (and even Batgirl), a fearless crusader aiming to line his Superclients' pockets with Superdollars. He's a brilliant businessman and a kid who never grew up, and he's a pro at using the media, from a cameo in Jerry Maguire to the article in your hand. While he may have Superpower-like influence in the NFL, we can't vouch that he's not deeply in touch with the dark side.

Nothing evil about him? We don't buy it. ●

Chips, Ahoy!

Magician and food junkie Penn Jillette stacks up the 10 best potato chips you've never heard of.

Fuck, I love America. I've been all around the world, and I've never found anything anywhere that isn't better in the U.S.A. I like to say there's no such thing as bad pizza or a bad blow job, but my best friend claims he got both in Holland, and my friends don't lie unless you pay them. Actually, the French claim to have invented oral sex, and the Italians pizza, but who cares—we perfected them. One thing that's all our own, though, is the all-American potato chip—more Born in the U.S.A. than the Boss.

That the chip came to be in upstate New York in 1853 is certain. But there are two stories surrounding its invention. In the first, the cool-named Catherine Speck Adkins Wicks was frying doughnuts and slicing potatoes when a potato slice fell into the bubbling fat. Voilà—the first chip. Sounds like bullshit. The other story says a customer at a Saratoga Springs restaurant complained about soggy, bland potatoes. The offended cook, Catherine's brother, George Speck Crum, fried some thinly sliced potatoes until they crunched, and made them extra salty out of spite. That's the story I'm buying. I think a lot of real joy has been born of petulance.

Americans are obsessed with chips. We spend $6.3 billion on them every year, and on Super Bowl Sunday, we consume at least 11 million pounds. My love affair with chips began at the end of high school, in my dead factory town of Greenfield, Massachusetts. I got a job driving a Ding Dong ice cream truck. My lunch would be three BombPops, a Nutty Buddy, and some lime popsicles for vitamin C. After that, you need some real food. But the only real food we sold was State Line potato chips. Luckily, the best follow-up to a lunch of sugar and fat is salt and fat. It's a yin-yang thing. I loved State Line. They were good, funky potato chips.

I guess I made an adolescent wish to have all the potato chips in the world, because now, when I'm 52 years old, Maxim has sent me boxes and boxes of cool, regional brands so I can do a taste test. (I sure hope in a few years they grant some of my later, better wishes, like having all those girls in my homeroom naked and on top of me.) Maybe they should've asked me to rate blow jobs and pizza. Doesn't a lot of that happen on Super Bowl Sunday, too? Anyway, I tasted all 62 bags. I will eat nothing but celery for the rest of my life.

Let's start with a few general notes. I don't like BBQ chips. If you do, they don't get a fair shake here—sorry. Also, some companies make cheese-flavored chips. They all suck. Everyone knows fake orange cheese-flavored powder is meant to go on popcorn. Many companies offer baked versions of their chips, which are supposed to be healthier. They just ain't right. The Patriot Act should have a clause against baked chips. Now on to the favorites.

10 Tim's

A lot of chips today have some "kettle cooked" thing going on that makes them extra thick and crunchy. I don't dig loud, hard chips. And Tim's Cascade out of Seattle are all loud, hard chips. When my buddy from Seattle had his orthodontia, the only thing they wouldn't let him eat was Tim's. Caramel apples were OK, but not Tim's. However, Tim's does make one flavor I like: Hawaiian Kettle Style Sweet Maui Onion. Like all kettle chips, they're trying too hard to be "authentic" or something. But the Maui onion flavor is nice. If I settled down with two bags of these and a case of Diet Rite, I'd be very happy.

9 Utz

What if potato chips aren't salty enough for you? Then you go with salt and vinegar. In the real world I love salt and I love vinegar, but salt and vinegar chips are too strong when I'm going to eat a whole big bag. And what kind of pussy wouldn't eat at least a whole big bag of chips? All that said, Utz Salt and Malt Vinegar are amazing. I still don't think I could eat a whole giant bag, but if someone else is eating them, I'll grab a handful.

PHOTOGRAPH, FRANCESCO TONELLI (MAIN)

8 Golden Flake

Golden Flake has a really nice, no-kidding Hot Thin & Crispy chip. The word hot on the bag is on fire—that's straightforward, and so are the chips. There's a cheesy poem on back of the bag, but the poem on the dill pickle flavor is better. First I should note that these chips are made with real pickle. I think I'd puke if I ate a whole bag, but that's a good thing. Here's the poem: "Kids and pregnant women think they are tasty/Try some yourself, be hasty." Man, ain't that America? These make me want to salute the flag.

7 Tri-Sum

This plain chip from Massachusetts is also really great. These cats have been around since 1908—there's a drawing of a horse-drawn potato chip wagon on the package—and like all ancient potato chip companies, they claim to be the original. Oldest or not, these chips have a real understated pride. They're a little crunchier than some of the others on the list. But they're still pretty darn tasty. Besides, Tri-Sum is a really boss name. I like a nutty spelling and a pun in my chip names.

6 Backer's

Backer's Red Hot Potato Chips are out of Missouri and they are hot! There's a cartoon of a 1930s piece of ass with the quote "The golden girl with the golden curl." I have no idea what that has to do with chips, but I like it. The chips are really crunchy and seem fresh, but that isn't a problem, because all the wholesomeness is taken away by the hot. Goddamn. These chips are so fucking hot.

5 Martin's

Let's say we have to split a bag of chips. You like crunchy, fresh, hippie chips, and I like old-fashioned chips that are a little soggy, so I can force more into my mouth at once. Martin's, out of central Pennsylvania, is for us. All the bags look like they have big crosses on them, so if you're a vampire, that might bum your shit. But the chips are good. The Red Hots are hot, the jalapeños are complex, and the ridges for dipping are strong. This is a great brand of chip.

4 Mister Bee

Here's another company that knows what I'm looking for in a chip. Mister Bee makes the old-fashioned, slightly soggy chips that I love. And they have a cartoon on the bag, which I now think I may require. It's a bee in a top hat with a cane—Mister Bee himself, I assume. They claim to be the only potato chip manufacturer in West Virginia and note that they're family-owned. Isn't everyone in West Virginia family?

Deep River Snacks

Sometimes a hippie kettle chip can surprise you. Deep River Snacks is a small company out of Connecticut that has a down-vest vibe, but they make a damn good chip. It's advertised as "gourmet," which bugs me, but their Rosemary & Olive Oil chip is delicious. After you've eaten all the powdered-onion MSG jive, the clean taste of rosemary and the new-grease feel of olive oil is pretty great. I do wish their cartoon was funnier, though.

2 Route 11

If a chip bag comes with a warning, pay attention. Route 11 has a flavor called Mama Zuma's Revenge. Tiny letters on the back of the bag read: "Warning: These chips are made with some of the hottest peppers on the planet." Holy shit. They are so goddamn hot. You know those other chips I said were hot? They aren't hot. These will fucking kill you. And if you need something soothing afterward, Route 11's sweet potato chips are really great. They do it all. Far and away my favorite modern potato chip company.

1 Better Made

The first thing I love about Better Made is the old-fashioned-looking bag with the weird-ass Little Orphan Annie–like drawing on it. This Detroit company started back in 1930 and brags about being Motown's last remaining chip maker. These are American chips exactly as they should be: not too crunchy, a little bit mushy. You can get a lot in your mouth at once. They also don't have any ridges or added flavor—just salt and cotton-fat goodness. I love these chips. It was hard to pick a best, but as my friend Kinky likes to say, "Find what you love, and let it kill you." I've found Better Made. ●

2. Heat oil in a large, heavy saucepan over medium heat until the temperature of the oil reaches 375°F.

ACCESS HEIDIWOOD

Admit it: You pretend to hate that your girlfriend "forces" you to watch The Hills, but secretly you can't wait to see what villainous vixen Heidi Montag is going to do next.

BY NOELLE HANCOCK PHOTOGRAPHS BY NAOMI KALTMAN

GREAT REALITY TV VILLAINS COME IN MANY SHAPES AND SIZES. There was Puck, the grimy Real World-er prone to sticking his nicotine-stained digits in other people's peanut butter. There was Omarosa, Trump's would-be apprentice, who pissed off everyone in the boardroom—including the combed-over mogul—with her confrontationally bitchy demeanor. And now there's 21-year-old Heidi Montag, who looks like a St. Pauli girl but has somehow become one of the most talked-about and controversial stars on television. On The Hills, MTV's reality show turned cultural phenomenon—which reaches more than three million viewers a week and follows the lives of privileged, hot twentysomethings as they navigate L.A.'s rocky social landscape—Heidi and her Chiclet-toothed boyfriend, Spencer Pratt, are the evil yin to narrator Lauren Conrad's happy-go-lucky Teen Vogue intern yang.

Heidi hails from the small town of Crested Butte, Colorado (population: 1,500), a crunchy mountain outpost that's about as far from Tinseltown as one can get. While studying at L.A.'s Fashion Institute of Design and Merchandising, Heidi befriended Lauren "L.C." Conrad, and the two became costars in 2006 when MTV spun off Laguna Beach into The Hills.

Heidi-as-bad-girl stems from a major blowout in season two, when she and Spencer allegedly spread rumors about a supposed L.C. sex tape. Tears were shed, Heidi and L.C. screamed at each other in various hip nightspots, and America was hooked. Today everyone from 12-year-old girls to crusty men's magazine editors is either on Team Heidi or Team Lauren, and Heidi in particular has become a paparazzi magnet, red carpet fixture, and tabloid magazine star. Like the show, she's become a bona fide cultural phenomenon. (Don't believe us? Google her and you'll find hundreds of fan—and enemy—sites, paparazzi footage on TMZ.com, and some pretty awesome bikini photos taken while she was filming her first music video, directed, of course, by Pratt.) Because we're on Team Heidi, this month at least, we sat down with the villainess to find out how she's dealing with such a meteoric rise to fame in Hollywood. Or, should we say, Heidiwood.

THE HILLS IS A "SCRIPTED" REALITY SHOW. LET'S SETTLE THIS: HOW REAL IS IT?

The Hills is a show that's 22 minutes long about seven people's lives. It's edited for drama, and there are story lines. If someone walks in front of the camera, we have to redo the shot. It's not like The Truman Show. They're not with us all the time, although I wish they were, because it would be a way crazier show. Let's see how Lauren would look then!

MEOW! SO ARE YOU AND L.C. FRIENDS AT ALL?

She's changed. Some people go more Hollywood than others. We're from different backgrounds. She grew up in that spoiled Laguna world, and I grew up with humble beginnings. She's very controlling. She was crazy about how much time I spent with Spencer. I've heard that she's a big diva now—"insiders" say.

A FEW YEARS AGO YOU LIVED IN A SMALL TOWN, AND ALL OF A SUDDEN YOU'RE ON THE COVER OF _MAXIM_. HOW ARE YOU DEALING WITH THE FAME?

I'm having fun. You can't take any of this seriously. My life really hasn't changed. I sit home and watch DVDs with my original friends.

EVER BEEN ACCOSTED BY CRAZED FANS?

I have. It's the craziest. I couldn't go anywhere in Vegas without people taking photos. People get crazy—they take this show very seriously.

DO YOU FEEL LIKE YOU AND SPENCER ARE UNFAIRLY DUBBED THE VILLAINS OF THE SHOW?

Obviously, it's hard. It's Lauren's show and she's the narrator—I'm always going to be the villain. She has to be shown in a good light because she's the main character. If people don't like her, people won't watch the show.

> "ALMOST EVERYONE ON THE SHOW HAS HAD SURGERY. HYPOCRITES!"

SO WHAT HAPPENED WITH THE WEDDING?
It's on pause. It was causing us to fight, so we decided not to deal with it. I've had a few girls scream while I was driving, "Get married! We love you guys together! Team Heidi!"

DID YOU GIVE BACK THE RING?
I still have it. But I guess when we decide to resume the wedding, I'll need a new ring.

RUMORS ARE FLYING THAT HE HAS A SEX TAPE.
Spencer does not have a sex tape. Believe me, I would know.

WERE YOU SURPRISED THAT THE TABLOIDS MADE SUCH A BIG DEAL OUT OF YOUR NOSE JOB AND BREAST AUGMENTATION?
It's funny. Almost everyone on the show has had some kind of surgery. They were saying malicious things about me, and I was like, "You guys are hypocrites—trying to make me look bad when you've done things to yourselves!"

WHO'S HAD WHAT DONE?
I don't want to get into it, because then I'm going to start a war.

WHAT'S THE FIRST THING YOU THOUGHT WHEN YOU SAW YOUR NEW BREASTS?
I was excited. I was always insecure, and this was something I really wanted for so long.

DID IT CHANGE THINGS IN THE BEDROOM?
I get a better ab workout now because it's like there are two weights on my chest. That makes it both easier and harder.

WHAT IS THE KINKIEST THING YOU'VE EVER DONE FOR SPENCER?
I tied him up the other night, like, "I'm going to tie you up, bad boy!" But I was laughing so hard. I couldn't take it seriously.

AND THE KINKIEST THING HE'S DONE FOR YOU?
He tied me up first!

YOU'RE CONSIDERING MARRIAGE, AND YOU'RE ONLY 21. ARE YOU WORRIED ABOUT SLEEPING WITH ONE PERSON FOR THE REST OF YOUR LIFE?
It's going to be a few years before we get married because I am so young and I want to ▸▸ go on tour. But it actually makes me sick to think about being with someone else. I'd rather be single for the rest of my life.

"I TIED SPENCER UP THE OTHER NIGHT. BUT HE TIED ME UP FIRST..."

WAIT, YOU WANT TO GO ON TOUR?
Yeah, I'm working on an album, but it's not like with most pop artists, where they have a song sent to them that has nothing to do with their emotions or lives. It's all about me and my life. I'm taking my time to make sure it's a classic. I don't want to be the next pop person who's in and out. I want to be like Michael Jackson, Madonna, Stevie Wonder—all the greats.

DID YOU ALWAYS WANT TO BE FAMOUS?
I always wanted to perform. When I was little, I'd flit around in giant sunglasses in a pink Barbie car, saying, "Hello, darling. I'm Heidi."

SO YOU WERE A FIVE-YEAR-OLD DRAG QUEEN?
Pretty much. That reminds me of a wild night in a San Francisco bar when I didn't realize it was gay night. A transvestite tried to make out with me. I got the hell out of there.

HAD ANY SURREAL HOLLYWOOD MOMENTS?
Yes! When Joel Madden and Nicole Richie came up to Spencer and me at the Beverly Hills Hotel and started yelling about something Spencer said about Nicole in an interview, like, two years ago. It doesn't get any more surreal than that. Joel was yelling, "You've been talking shit about my girl!" He was removed by security.

HOW COME WE NEVER SEE YOU STUMBLING OUT OF HYDE, SHITFACED, AT 2 A.M.?
I sort of stopped drinking.

WHO GIVES UP DRINKING AT 21?
I used to drink—sometimes a little too much—for a couple of years, but then I grew out of it.

WHEN YOU DID GO OUT, YOU MUST'VE HEARD SOME BAD PICKUP LINES. THE WORST?
I was at a party wearing red shoes, and this guy goes, "If you click your heels together three times, will you come home to my bed?"

HAS A GUY EVER SAID ANYTHING LAME IN BED?
One time a guy was like, "Don't worry, I really like small boobs. I don't care that you don't have more than a handful." I was like, "Yeah? You can go fuck yourself." ●

YOU'RE JUMPING INTO THE SWORD-AND-SORCERY GENRE WITH YOUR NEW MOVIE, IN THE NAME OF THE KING. CAN YOU TELL WHEN YOU'RE MAKING A MOVIE IF IT WILL BE GOOD OR BAD?
You just don't know these days. There are those horrible words: straight to video. Deliverance, I thought, was going to be special. Bad ones? They happen more often than not.

SPEAKING OF DELIVERANCE, JANET LEIGH WAS AFRAID TO TAKE SHOWERS AFTER PSYCHO. DO YOU GET TERRIFIED WHEN YOU HEAR A BANJO?
I don't, but I'm not sure about Ned Beatty.

WHAT WAS IT LIKE ON SET THE DAY OF THAT INFAMOUS SCENE?
Bill McKinney, who played the hillbilly, is a terrific actor. My friend Bruce Dern told me later that he said to him, "The best thing you can do is just try to rape Ned Beatty."

GOOD GOD!
All that "squeal, piggy, piggy" stuff was not in the script. Two camera operators looked away during the scene because it was getting so hairy. Finally it went too far, and I ran into the shot. I asked John Boorman, the director, "Why did you let it go that long?" He said, "I wanted to take it as far as I could take the audience, and I figured you'd run in when it got too far."

AS A FORMER INTERNATIONAL SEX SYMBOL, WHAT ARE YOUR THOUGHTS ABOUT MATT DAMON BEING NAMED SEXIEST MAN ALIVE?
I don't have any thoughts on any man being named Sexiest Man Alive.

WHAT'S THE EXACT NUMBER OF SHIRT BUTTONS A GUY SHOULD LEAVE UNDONE IN ORDER TO ATTRACT WOMEN?
I look at those pictures of me years ago and I almost want to throw up. What an asshole! Guy's got a medal around his neck and his shirt's open—what's he trying to prove?

HOW MANY WOMEN WOULD YOU GUESS YOU'VE SLEPT WITH?
Oh, I wouldn't guess.

TOO MANY TO COUNT?
It's not that. If I give a number, it'll sound like I studied humility with Dick Cheney.

DID YOU INTERACT WITH ACTUAL PORN STARS WHILE MAKING BOOGIE NIGHTS?
Yeah, and I didn't like it. When you meet those people, you want to put rubber gloves on and go take a bath.

IS IT TRUE THAT TRANS AM SALES INCREASED SO DRAMATICALLY AFTER SMOKEY AND THE BANDIT THAT PONTIAC PROMISED YOU A NEW CAR EVERY YEAR IN PERPETUITY?
Yes. Sales went up 700 percent, and the guy said, "You'll get a Trans Am for life." So I gave the first one to my sister, then I gave one to my brother, and I gave one to my Smokey costar Jerry Reed.

> "I LOOK AT PICTURES OF ME WITH MY SHIRT OPEN YEARS AGO AND ALMOST WANT TO THROW UP."

The fourth year, I didn't get one. I didn't want to be an asshole and say, "Where's my car?" But it wasn't there. So I called, and they said, "The guy who promised you that? He died."

YOU WERE A CONTESTANT ON THE DATING GAME. DO YOU THINK CHUCK BARRIS REALLY WAS A GOVERNMENT ASSASSIN?
If he was, it was a perfect disguise. I was on that show with Joe Namath and another guy, and the girl picked the other guy. Afterwards, Joe and I went out and got smashed. To this day when we see each other, we get very silly.

SO YOU AND BROADWAY JOE USED TO PARTY TOGETHER. WHO DRANK WHO UNDER THE TABLE?
I could drink pretty good. But I used to cheat, like when I filmed Mystery, Alaska with the Aussie. You know—the Gladiator.

RUSSELL CROWE?
Yeah, but he gets a little mean. One night I said to the girl behind the bar, "Here's 100 bucks. Give me a vodka and tonic with a lime, but after that, alternate with water and lime." On the 10th round Russell grabbed the glass and took a swallow. Thank God it was the vodka. He said, "You're all right, mate."

BACK IN THE DAY, YOU HAD A REP AS A FIGHTING MAN, TOO. WHAT WAS YOUR BRAWLING STYLE?
My dad was a cop, and he hammered into me to always be the last guy to walk away. But he added, "It doesn't matter what kind of shape you leave the other guy in, as long as I don't have to take you to prison."

YOU'RE FOREVER CONNECTED TO THE MUSTACHE. RATE THE FOLLOWING GUYS' FACIAL FUZZ: JASON LEE ON MY NAME IS EARL.
It's a typical mustache where I can tell what he ate for breakfast.

TOM SELLECK.
A great mustache. He's got it all.

MIKE DITKA.
A little patchy. He ought to forget it.

HITLER.
All-time worst mustache in history.

BURT, MIND IF WE ASK ABOUT YOUR HAIR?
I wear wigs once in a while. Sometimes I do, sometimes I don't. It's all a joke, really.

HAVE YOU EVER HAD SOMEONE MESS WITH YOU IN A BAR AND TRY TO KNOCK YOUR WIG OFF?
I always say, "If you can get it off of my head before I kick all the air out of your body, let's do that." One good thing, no matter how old I get, is that people say, "He's crazy; he'll kill you." I have that reputation, so I just stick with it. ●

The book Do It Yourself poses a question: What happens when you give a bunch of young babes their own cameras, tell them to dream up their most far-fetched erotic fantasies, and then come back the next day? It's a study in style and the female libido. The subjects shoot themselves—using mirrors or a remote shutter button. Think posers, masturbators, nude contortionists, and every one of them smoking. Photographer Uwe Ommer got the idea for the book when he caught a baby-sitter toying with his Polaroid. Don't miss Ommer's other hot coffee-table books, Black Ladies and Asian Ladies.

If your first question is, "What kind of music does she spin?" you need to throw away your glow sticks and buy pants that actually fit. The answer, if you must know, is house and electronic. Niki Belucci, 24, is a Hungarian ex-porn star who's been spinning topless at packed clubs and festivals from Russia to Colombia for the past four years. She's a star in Europe and poised to hit the States. If you haven't screened her work in Private X-Treme 7: Body Shock, check out YouTube videos of her on the job. She's so hot she makes the thought of standing in a room full of drunk, unwashed Euros sound appealing.

sexiest blog

Confessions of a College Callgirl is exactly what it sounds like: the diary of a Manhattan college student who (purportedly) has dabbled in the world of hookerdom. It's also smart, funny, and self-deprecating. And the (unnamed) call girl didn't even charge for the time it took to answer our questions. That must mean she really likes us!

Q: You write a sexy blog, but is your job actually sexy?

A: Just like any random anonymous sex with strangers, sometimes it's sexy and sometimes it's disappointing. I write more about the unsexy times, because they're funnier and more interesting. But I wouldn't do it if I wasn't enjoying myself at least part of the time.

Is there anything that turns you on anymore?

I like sex to be a little bit dirty and unusual. Making sweet love on satin sheets is never going to do it for me. Spank me, talk dirty, use some toys, get creative! Some nice, witty banter with an intellectual equal is the best foreplay, however.

Do readers think you're making it all up?

A lot of people think I'm a dude because they can't imagine a woman being so into sex and not ashamed of it. But all of it happened. I try to be really honest and describe things exactly—and I do get turned on writing the sex scenes in detail.

But unless you've dated her, you've never seen her looking this good. She loves Goodfellas, Guns n' Roses, and racecars. "I'll kick any guy's ass any day," she says of her driving abilities. Oh, really? So Vanessa...

Q: YOUR MOST FAMOUS TV AD IS FOR SUZUKI MOTORCYCLES. YOU'RE THAT BABE WHO STRADDLES A BIKE OUT IN THE BONNEVILLE SALT FLATS. DO YOU REALLY RIDE?

A: No, but I've always wanted to. I like speed bikes. I like the way they're shaped, the clean lines. I'm a speed bike kind of girl. I like a guy who can ride a motorcycle.

WHAT'S WITH THE RACING FETISH?

I grew up with speed. My father taught me how to drive a stick-shift Ferrari when I was 12. We're Italian, and he had a couple of Ferraris.

ALL THIS TALK OF SPEED IS MAKING OUR RPM GAUGE REDLINE. ARE YOU A BAD GIRL?

Cheers to the eggheads at the University of Lausanne, Switzerland. Researchers have found a gene in cichlid fish informally called the Oral Sex Gene. GUESS WHO? THE WORLD'S SEXIEST SUPERMODEL

BECOMING A MODEL IS ONE THING. But becoming a Guess girl—and following in the footsteps of such icons as Claudia Schiffer, Drew Barrymore, Adriana Lima, Paris Hilton, and, of course, Anna Nicole Smith—forever places a woman in pop-culture history as a goddess. Long before she broke through by appearing on Guess billboards everywhere, Sarah Mutch was a 13-year-old girl shopping with her friends in Vancouver. In a stroke of what seemed like once-in-a-lifetime luck, a talent scout approached her and gave her his card. "I was scouted a few times before that when I was 11 and 12," Sarah says, "but my mom said no because I was so young." The third time, however, Mom gave her blessing, and young Sarah was soon globetrotting and mugging for the covers of Italian Vogue, CosmoGIRL!, and Elle. She was thrilled and terrified: "I had no idea where I was or what I was doing." Now 22, Sarah has thriving modeling and acting careers—she most recently landed a Frederick's of Hollywood campaign, and she's appeared on shows such as Smallville and Supernatural. Here's to ubiquity in 2008.

Were you blown away when you found out they wanted you to be a Guess girl?
I was excited, but I had bronchitis. My manager was freaking out, going, "Oh, my God! You booked Guess!" I was like, "You know what? I'm sick. I don't think I can do it." He said, "Sarah, you're going." Thankfully, there was a little place on the set where I could lie down, so I'd be curled up and shaking between shots. It's actually funny. The whole time I was so ill, but somehow the photos came out looking half-decent.

Did working for such an iconic brand change your career?
Definitely. When clients look through my book and they come to that shoot, their eyes light up. They're like, "Wow, she works for Guess!"

Any thoughts on Anna Nicole Smith?
I actually was going to audition to play Anna in the movie they're making of her life. She was a mother really young, and one of her first jobs was as a stripper. The drama in her life kind of led to her fame, which is the case with a lot of celebrities. It's sad, but it's a lot of people's way of breaking through.

Was it a culture shock entering the modeling world so young?
Absolutely. When I was 15, I remember being at a model's apartment, and girls were throwing up in the bathroom and doing drugs. You have to be careful who you hang around with. And you have to be responsible at the photo shoots, with all the photographers hitting on you.

How did your friends react to your fame?
It was everybody's dream to be a model except mine, so they were angry and jealous. I lost all my friends. I had a horrible time in high school. Girls would throw apples at me and call me a slut, even though I was a virgin.

You're going to make us cry! On a lighter note, what are your favorite places to work?
Banzai beach in Australia. Some of the other models and I would lie on the beach and talk until the sun came up. I also have a lot of fun in Japan, which has a strange underground scene—the strip clubs, the prostitutes. My friend and I were walking one night when we saw a stand that said MAGICAL MUSHROOMS. Right there on the street! It was wild. ●

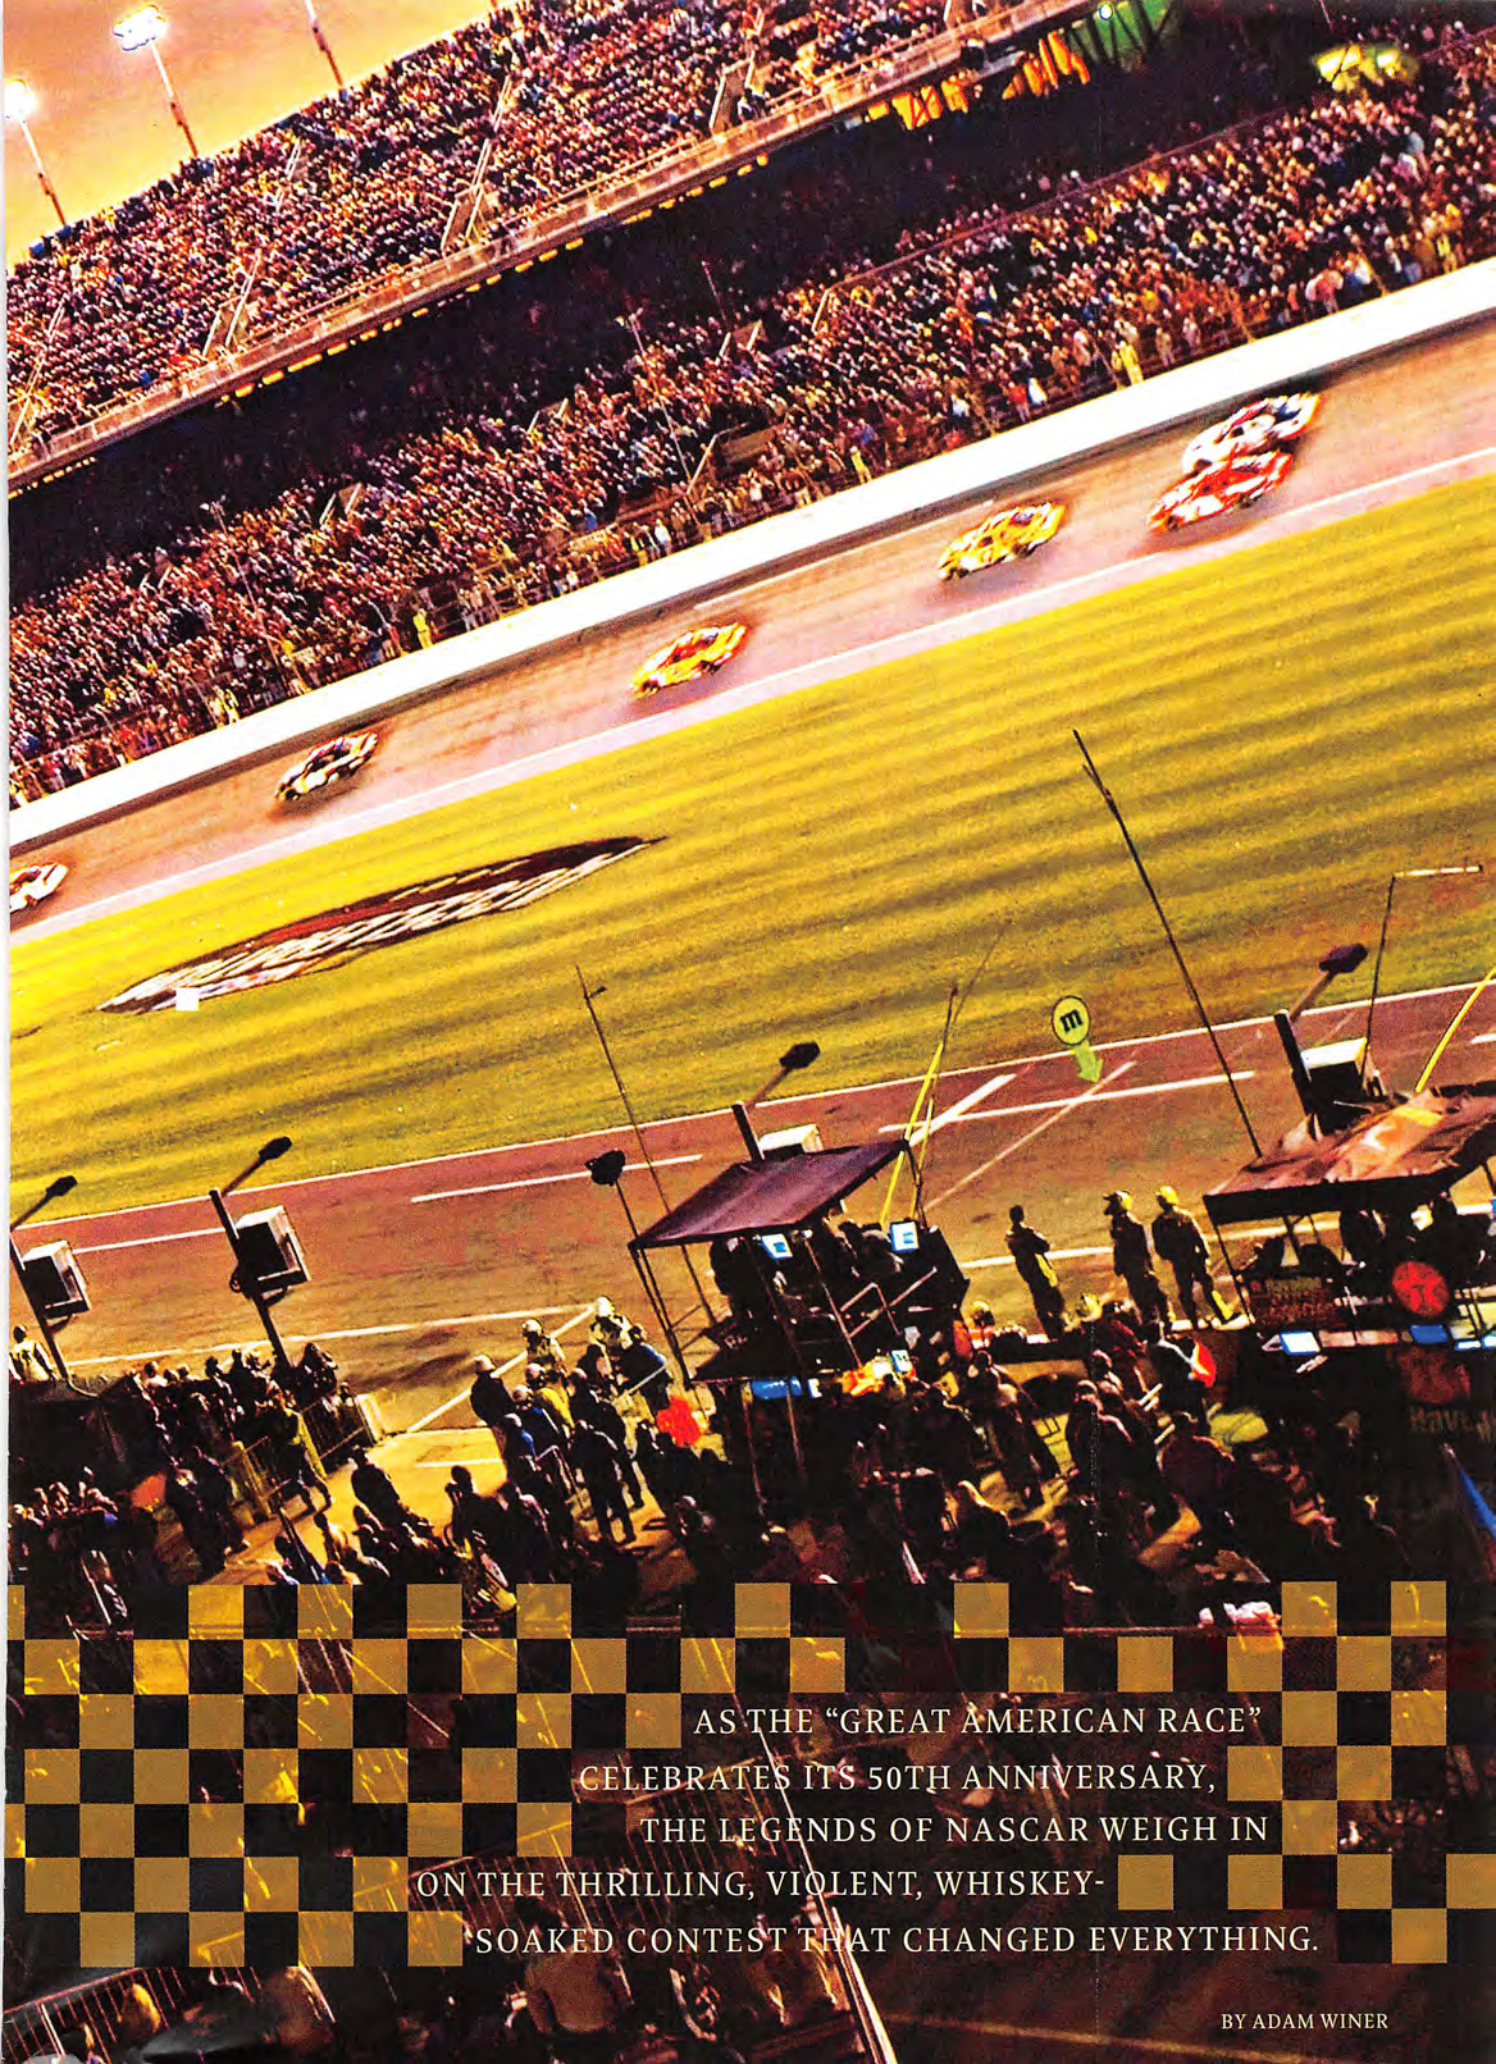
RING OF FIRE

An Oral History of the Daytona 500



AS THE "GREAT AMERICAN RACE" CELEBRATES ITS 50TH ANNIVERSARY, THE LEGENDS OF NASCAR WEIGH IN ON THE THRILLING, VIOLENT, WHISKEY-SOAKED CONTEST THAT CHANGED EVERYTHING.

BY ADAM WINER

EVERY WINTER FOR HALF A CENTURY, A NARrow strip of shoreline 60 miles northeast of Orlando is transformed into an automotive mecca where thousands flock to worship at the altar of speed. With the 50th running of the Daytona 500 this February 17, the city of Daytona Beach will play host to 230,000, a riot of rowdy and fiercely loyal fans cheering on the 43 drivers competing for a $19 million purse and the title of champion of the Great American Race. More than even the Super Bowl or the World Series, the Daytona 500 transcends sports. It's a clash of industrial titans (Chevy, Ford, Dodge, and now Toyota). It's about technical advancement and iconoclastic athletes risking their necks for the checkered flag. It's about family legacies and feuds, glory and death, and the never-ending quest for the almighty dollar. But in the beginning—before the multimillion-dollar TV deals, before NASCAR founder "Big" Bill France dreamed of building a titanic speedway by the sea—there was nothing but a hard-packed strip of beach and some rolling waves. And it was on that beach that a handful of cars gathered in the early days of the automobile to give birth to American motor racing.

Racing on the hard-packed Daytona Beach in 1940. Below right: Organizer Bill France behind the wheel in 1931; his business card.

Dale Earnhardt Jr. 2004 champion • When you drive around Daytona, there aren't any signs saying this is where racing started. After all these years, you'd assume that every sign in town would have a racecar on it. But you don't really feel like this is history, that it's a big fucking deal, until you're on the speedway property—then, bam!

Buz McKim Historian with the NASCAR Hall of Fame • It goes all the way back to the turn of the century, when rich folks would come [to the Daytona Beach area] for what they called the winter season. The automobile was fairly new, and these folks would bring their newfangled cars down on the train so they could show them off. At the time there was less than 150 miles of paved road in the entire country, and most of that was in metropolitan areas. So these guys had their cars and no place to run them, and they darn sure couldn't run them at full speed. The beach was a God-given gift. It was rock hard.

Junior Johnson 1960 champion • The sand was basically like asphalt, and the closer you got to the water, the faster the car would run because the ground was so hard. So they'd race when the tide went out.

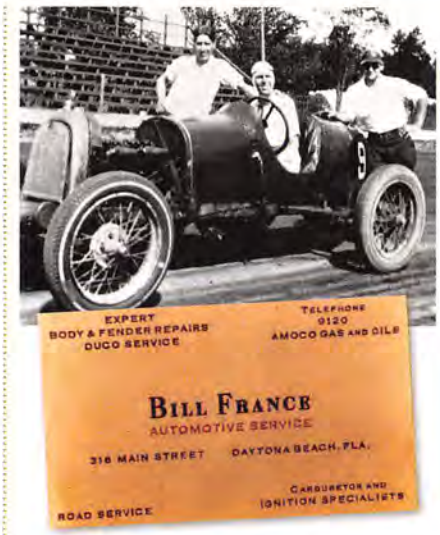
McKim • The first match race, in 1902, was between Ransom Olds, of Oldsmobile, and Alexander Winton, who was the biggest name in the automotive industry at the time. Before long, worldwide attention was focused on the Daytona Beach area.

Mario Andretti 1967 champion • Because of the nature of the beach, you had a very long stretch where you could get a good run in an open area. So they set many land-speed records there. Then the obvious thing happened: Development came. After that the drivers trying to set world speed records moved to the Bonneville Salt Flats in Utah.

McKim • The land-speed era lasted on the sands from 1903 to 1935. There was so much development on the beachfront that it was really getting impossible to run 275 mph down the beach, because you're basically in people's backyard. In 1936 the city said, "Hey, we've got to keep this racing tradition going." So they ran the first stock car race. It was a financial disaster. The city lost $20,000, and they said, "Guess what, we're out of the racing business."

Junior Johnson • The old course was [a loop made up of] the beach and Highway A1A. Coming off the pavement, you had to slow down before you hit the beach or you'd go off into the trees and bushes. Sometimes as many as 25 or 30 cars would be piled up there.

Jimmie Johnson 2006 champion • Whenever I see those old videos, I smile and think of how much fun it must have been to race on that combined course. Well...I'm not sure I'd want to race a car with just a shady lap belt and a leather cap for a helmet, but it does look fun.



Cale Yarborough 1968, 1977, 1983, 1984 champion • Big Bill [France] used to run a filling station in Daytona. He started off as a racecar driver and went from driving to promoting. He was determined to make this sport go.

McKim • The guru of all race promoters was a fellow named Ralph Hankinson. Bill France said, "Jeez, if I can get the old man to promote a race, we know it's going to be a success." But Bill didn't have the 25 cents to make the call, so he called collect. Hankinson didn't know who this Bill France guy was, so he refused the call. Bill complained to a friend who had some money. The friend told Bill, "Let's go in partners. I'll put the money up, and you do the footwork." They ended up splitting a $200 profit, and Bill said, "Hey, this is pretty cool." He realized how big racing could be, and came up with the idea for NASCAR. So if you look at NASCAR and what it's become, it all came about because of a 25¢ phone call that wasn't accepted in 1938.

A Speedway Is Born

ON DECEMBER 14, 1947, AFTER NINE YEARS OF promoting races in and around Daytona Beach, Bill France gathered a group of racing aficionados in a smoke-filled room at the Streamline Hotel and officially formed the National Association for Stock Car Racing. Always a masterful marketer and promoter, France recognized the fundamental appeal of his sport to its audience: the ability to identify with the good ol' boys on the racetrack. The fans drove the same model cars, and they came from the same small southeastern towns. Unlike all other sports, stock car racing was a torture test of consumer products in front of a live audience. If fans saw a Chevy winning on the track, they showed up at Chevy dealerships. The big Detroit companies started flooding NASCAR with money, upping the quality of the cars, the speeds, the purses. As NASCAR's audience grew over the next decade, its signature Daytona races along Highway A1A and the beach became increasingly crowded and hard to control. In 1952 the race had to be shortened by 10 laps to get everybody out before high tide. The situation was becoming unmanageable. By the mid-1950s, Big Bill had decided to risk his financial future on replacing the beach course with an imposing superspeedway that would attempt to outshine even the country's most well-known track: Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

Andretti • Indianapolis had been established since the beginning of the century, and it was really the center for racing in America. The France family thought they needed a marquee event to represent stock cars, so they decided to build a track even faster than Indy. Stock cars are obviously not as fast as open-wheeled cars, so he had to build the banking to get the speeds up. Indy has no banking. Daytona was a different animal from the start.

Robin Braig President of Daytona International Speedway • Bill France took all kinds of risks. The turns have 31-degree banking. The technology is just now here today to actually pave that kind of banking. Any modern engineer is always amazed that Big Bill was somehow able to do it 50 years ago.

Jim Hunter NASCAR vice president of corporate communications • Even in the industry, nobody took France seriously. He was some nut down in Florida building this two-and-a-half-mile track. Money was a huge problem. At one point he needed $30,000 to complete the track and had exhausted all his sources. He got the money from Pepsi in return for giving them the soda-pouring rights at the track. That was the beginning of corporate involvement in motorsports.

Junior Johnson • The first time I drove in there, I really thought Bill France had lost his mind. I didn't know how he was going to get cars to run long enough to last 500 miles. Back then our cars just didn't last like they do now.

Dale Jarrett 1993, 1996, 2000 champion • Daytona was bigger than life. I can remember standing on the back of our car in the infield as a seven-year-old kid watching my father [two-time NASCAR champion Ned Jarrett]. There was nothing in my life that seemed bigger than there.

Jimmie Johnson • The first time [someone] took me to the Daytona speedway, I couldn't believe how big and fast that place was. I was hanging on the fence, and before I knew it 43 cars had gone by me in the blink of an eye. I was like, "This is serious."

McKim • No one had ever seen anything that big before. The driver Jimmy Thompson said, "There have been other tracks that separated the men from the boys. This is the track that will separate the brave from the weak after the boys are gone."

Former moonshiner Junior Johnson drafted his way to Victory Lane in 1960.

McKim • What was amazing about the first Daytona 500 [held in 1959] was that it turned out to be a photo finish. Bill France saw Johnny Beauchamp and Lee Petty running neck and neck. They didn't have a finish-line camera set up, so he went down to watch the cars come across. But Joe Weatherly was a lap down and on the outside, and he blocked France's view. There was no way to know who won. Beauchamp was flagged the winner, but Petty protested. They put a hold on everything, and France put out an APB for anyone who had photographs or movies of the finish. Everybody in the racing world was sitting there with bated breath, and after three days of looking at every picture and studying every film, they finally determined that Lee Petty had won. After that they put a camera at the finish line.

Marvin Panch 1961 champion • They ran convertibles in 1959, because Bill wanted to get a convertibles circuit going. When you were in a convertible, the fans could see you working the car, watch your arms and everything. So Bill came by and offered me $1,000 to cut the top off my car. I did, and it was the biggest mistake I ever made. The convertibles were so much slower, it almost felt like you were being sucked out of the car. That was the only time they ran convertibles in the 500.

Junior Johnson • I found out about drafting in 1960. I was out trying to get my car faster [in practice sessions before the 500], and Cotton Owens came by. I knew his car was a lot faster than mine was, so as he went by I ducked in behind him. Going down the backstretch, shucks, I was sitting there running only half-throttle, and I started thinking to myself, Why in the world am I keeping up with him? I finally figured it out, but I didn't say nothing about it. I just waited till the race started and began grabbing those fast cars and drafting them. As they dropped out, I'd get the next one that came along. I drafted myself all the way to Victory Lane. I won $19,500. Oh, Lord, $19,500 was like you were rich.

Kevin Harvick 2007 champion • I don't know the exact number, but the prize when I won was about $1.5 million [out of an $18 million purse]. But to be able to see your name on the trophy with the greats, that was probably the best part.

Daytona Revs Up

LIKE MANY OF HIS EARLY RACING CONTEMporaries, Junior Johnson cut his driving teeth as a moonshiner, outfitting his car to outgun the authorities while running hooch throughout the Smoky Mountains. For years drivers like Johnson had been racing their souped-up whiskey wagons throughout the South. These early drivers' skills and mechanical knowledge may have been born out of necessity, but their wheel-handling and fearlessness made them instant players on the NASCAR circuit. The sport's whiskey-running roots helped give NASCAR its character and lent to its legend. And there was no better place to watch the moonshine runners run than Daytona.

Andretti • In those days you didn't have much [driver] influx from other parts of the States. You were out of style unless you had a drawl. But if you look at the drivers that were champions then, they were as good as they come.

Junior Johnson • Daytona was sort of a party town when the race showed up. A lot of times [infamous drivers] Curtis Turner and Joe Weatherly would stay up all night and race the next day. They could handle it; I could never handle it that strong. That used to be a big part of racing. And now it just doesn't happen at all.

Hunter • There's more than one story about what happened to rental cars back in the old days. You'd have to rent a car to drive around the city when you were here, so Turner and Weatherly would race their rentals around the traffic circle in the middle of town.

Panch • I've heard that Joe Weatherly ran a rental car into the swimming pool one night.

FAST TIMES The evolution of the stock car.

1959 Lee Petty's Oldsmobile 88
Nearly identical to models sold on dealer lots, early stock cars had little done beyond a fierce engine tuning. Daytona's banked turns helped Petty and his Olds win the first 500 with an average speed of 145 mph.

1970 Pete Hamilton's Plymouth Superbird
Designed specifically for NASCAR—then sold in limited quantities to qualify as a stock car—the Superbird won a staggering number of races. NASCAR changed its rules within a year, virtually retiring the car.

1981 Bobby Allison's Pontiac LeMans
The 1970s energy crisis forced Americans to drive smaller cars, so NASCAR was affected in kind with Bobby Allison's LeMans leading the charge—and taking the pole at Daytona with a 194 mph average lap speed.

In 1979 the race was broadcast on network TV for the first time, and viewers got an eyeful when Bobby Allison (left) and Cale Yarborough got into a fistfight on the infield grass after a late-race collision.

Hunter • People were always pulling pranks on each other. One night a guy who worked for Goodyear came into a bar. Everyone was having drinks and laughing when all of a sudden this explosion went off. We all turned to see this guy standing there under the chandelier with a shotgun. He said, "I think I got it." He wasn't arrested; he was just doing it to scare the shit out of people.

Jeff Hammond 1989 champion crew chief for Darrell Waltrip and current Fox analyst • Since the inception of NASCAR until somewhere around 1995, cheating was accepted. You'd come to Daytona with a dozen things you had done that you knew NASCAR wasn't going to like (such as using nitrous or narrowing the chassis). When they got through the inspection process, if six of those things got through, you had a successful outing. It was all part of the spirit that made our sport so exciting.

Television Takes Hold

BY THE LATE '70S, THE STOCK CARS THAT HAD run at about 145 mph during the inaugural 500 were approaching 200 mph. Two decades of speedway racing had built an expanding pantheon of stars that included Richard Petty, David Pearson, A. J. Foyt, Cale Yarborough, and the brothers Donnie and Bobby Allison. But Daytona's popularity was still confined largely to the Southeast. That all changed on February 18, 1979, when CBS broadcast the first live airing of the Daytona 500. A huge blizzard happened to be pounding the East Coast that day, confining many Northerners to their homes. With nothing better to do, they tuned in to the 500. What they saw immediately pushed both NASCAR and the Daytona 500 into the national consciousness.

Michael Waltrip 2001, 2003 champion • Thirty years ago my family used to get into our car and drive an hour toward Bowling Green, Kentucky and sit on the side of the road to listen to the races on the radio being broadcast out of Nashville, just to hear how my brother [eventual 1989 Daytona champ Darrell Waltrip] was doing. That's how desperate you had to be to want to know something about our sport. So [the 1979 Daytona 500] being live on network television was a huge deal.

Hammond, who worked the 1979 pit crew for Cale Yarborough • Once the race got under way, it was pretty obvious to everyone that Cale and both Donnie and Bobby Allison had good, fast cars. And as the race was winding down, everybody could see that Cale was just holding back, biding his time, trying to set Donnie up. Down on pit road, we all thought we were on our way to Victory Lane.

Yarborough • I had Donnie set up for the last lap to slingshot past him on the backstretch. Then when I made my move, he ran me right off the racetrack. It had been raining all night, and there wasn't nothing but mud in the infield. When I hit that mud, I was out of control at 200 miles per hour.

Waltrip • Cale and Donnie got out of their cars, Bobby Allison drove up, and they all got in a wild, drag-down fistfight. I was 15 years old and standing right there in the infield. I thought seeing grownups fight was pretty cool.

Daytona's turns are banked at 31 degrees.

1987 Bill Elliott's Ford Thunderbird
Traveling an average of 210 mph during qualifying laps, Elliott set a Daytona speed record that still stands today. The T-Bird's curved lines hinted at the rounded body that would go on to dominate NASCAR design.

1999 Jeff Gordon's Chevy Monte Carlo
By the late '90s, the manufacturer provided only the trunk, roof, and hood pieces, and while regulations put the engines at around 800 horses, the now-mandatory restrictor plates kept the cars cruising around 200 mph.

2007 The Car of Tomorrow
NASCAR's latest, controversial overhaul bulked up the roll cage, strengthened the doors, and added an adjustable wing. Practically the only way to tell the make and model of a "stock" car is the name on the grill.—A.W.

Bobby Allison 1978, 1982, 1988 champion • I pulled up in the vicinity of the wreckage. Cale started yelling, and at that point I probably questioned Cale's ancestry. That did not calm him down any. He ran toward me, and I think I probably questioned his ancestry a little bit more. With that he hit me in the face with his helmet. I said to myself, "I have to get out of the car and handle this right now or run from him for the rest of my life." So I climbed out of the car, and—my interpretation—he started beating on my fist with his nose.

Yarborough • I never hit anybody with my helmet. I just pushed [Bobby] one time. It didn't last that long, but it lasted long enough to give the sport a boost, I'll tell you that.

Live TV commentary at that very moment • Here comes Richard Petty! He leads Darrell Waltrip by five car lengths, five more lengths to A. J. Foyt. Richard Petty takes the outside...And Richard Petty will win the Daytona 500! Apparently, we may have a fistfight. We see drivers in helmets, safety officials trying to jump in and separate them, as tempers have really flared after this amazing incident on the final lap!

Hammond • That's the way NASCAR was. You had to sometimes make a stand, and that's what Bobby felt like he had to do. And Cale felt like he needed to also. That will always be the day that we woke up America to what stock car racing was all about.

Yarborough • Everywhere I go, people still ask about it. About 80 percent of the country was snowed in that day, so it was the biggest TV audience we ever had. Usually when people watch ball games and stuff, they turn the TV off when it's over. When this was over, they were jumping up and down in the middle of the floor.

Tony Stewart 2002, 2005 NASCAR points champion • I remember seeing it on TV. I was about eight years old. That was my first memory of Daytona. Nobody would have known that day was going to build this sport to what it is now.

Allison • NASCAR fined us $6,000 apiece. Then I think they used the $18,000 to make commercials with the fight. They play the clip all the time, but they haven't given me a royalty or commission. I'm still waiting for it.

The Earnhardt Era

1979 WAS ALSO THE ROOKIE YEAR OF THE man who would go on to become one of the most popular drivers in NASCAR history: Dale Earnhardt. The son of accomplished dirt track racer Ralph Earnhardt, Dale had dropped out of high school against his parents' wishes to follow in his old man's footsteps. Fearless to the point of near-recklessness, Earnhardt drove with a brazenly aggressive style that earned him both the nickname "the Intimidator" and a legion of die-hard fans. Earnhardt won Rookie of the Year honors in his first full year on the circuit and the season championship his second. But a victory at Daytona continually eluded him. During the '80s and '90s, Earnhardt won more qualifying races at the superspeedway than any other driver in history, yet on the days of the 500, fate seemed determined to keep his No. 3 Chevy out of Victory Lane. In 1986 he was in the lead with three laps to go—and ran out of fuel. In 1990 he was in the lead on the very last lap—and blew a tire. In 1991 he was in the lead early on—and hit a sea gull. It wasn't until his 20th attempt, in 1998, that Earnhardt finally won. His years of frustration, his eventual victory, and his on-track death in 2001 became the defining drama of Daytona in the modern era.

Dale Earnhardt Sr. won more qualifying races at Daytona than any other driver but seemed perpetually jinxed on race day. He finally prevailed in 1998, only to lose his life on the track in 2001.

Blood on the tracks: a Daytona pileup in 1999.

Larry McReynolds 1998 champion crew chief with Dale Earnhardt • My first year with Dale was 1997. We took the lead with about 25 laps to go. Then with 11 or 12 laps to go, Jeff Gordon turned us sideways and the car started barrel rolling. The car finally settled down on its wheels, and Dale got into the ambulance. You could tell he was frustrated. He was sitting there looking out the back door, and he said to himself, "You know, all the tires are up on that car." So he got out of the ambulance, got into his car, cranked it up, and drove it back to the pits. We pieced and patched just enough to get to the end of the race. It was another one of those years.

Richard Childress Owner of the No. 3 car • We came so close to winning so many times. We won the Daytona 499 on several occasions, but we didn't get to 500 till 1998. That was like a burden was lifted off of all of us. [After winning under a caution flag, Dale] came on the radio and said, "Mr. France, can I go out here and tear your grass up?"

Kevin Harvick (center) celebrates his victory in 2007.

McReynolds • That's the first time I remember seeing anyone do donuts in their racecar. Then when we got into the press box later and looked down, the son of a gun had almost made a perfect 3 with the marks from his donuts.

Childress • But what was so cool was seeing everyone from the other crews step out on pit road to congratulate him.

Hammond • I was there. It was a real slow roll down pit road . It was almost like a general on review. It was like all the troops came out and stood on the line and saluted the general as he came down the ranks.

Waltrip, whom Earnhardt signed in 2001 to drive for his team Dale Earnhardt, Inc • [Before the 2001 Daytona 500], Dale said, "Me and you and Dale Jr. can work together and win this race." That right there just goes to show you how perceptive Dale was, because when I looked up in my rearview mirror with 10 laps to go, it was the three of us running one, two, three. And I was fortunate enough to get to the front first.

Rusty Wallace 1989 NASCAR points champion and current ESPN analyst • I remember coming down the back straightaway, and it was the last lap. Dale came flying across my bow with the nose pointing right at the wall at over 200 mph. I missed him by about six inches. He hit the wall, and we went on. Michael won the race, Dale Jr. was second, and I finished third. I'll never forget thinking, Boy, old Earnhardt's going to be mad as a hornet—he wrecked on the last corner. Never could I have known he would have lost his life right there.

McReynolds, who joined the Fox broadcast team in 2001 • It was our first broadcast [with me in the booth]. I saw the ambulance leave, and it didn't even make a stop at the infield care center. At that point I didn't feel good at all. I was sitting at the Daytona airport eating a hamburger—I remember exactly where I was—when our producer called and said, "Larry, Dale didn't make it." The Elvis Presley of our sport had been killed.

The 50TH 500

IN THE WAKE OF DALE EARNHARDT'S TRAGIC death, NASCAR ramped up safety efforts, installing impact-dampening track walls, mandating head and neck restraint systems for all drivers, and eventually engineering a newly designed racecar with multiple safety features that will make its Daytona debut this year at the 50th running of the 500. Today, a century after America's earliest speed demons took to the sands of Daytona Beach, and half a century after Big Bill France inaugurated the 500, NASCAR stands unchallenged as America's fastest growing sport. As its signature event, the 500 reaches an audience 100 times greater than that of a normal race, challenging even the Super Bowl as the biggest sporting event in America. And on February 17, NASCAR's latest crop of superstars will start their engines, looking to drive 500 miles into the Daytona record books.

Jeff Gordon 1997, 1999, 2005 champion • Winning the Daytona 500 gets better each time. The longer you're in the sport, the more you appreciate the big races. With this year being the 50th anniversary, it's going to be huge.

Jimmie Johnson • [With historic races], you look at who won the first, the 25th, and then the 50th. Those things really carry weight and prestige. It's not like we need any more motivation out there, but it's something we're all going to be thinking about.

Stewart • I've won two championships, and I've won the Brickyard 500 in Indianapolis twice; Daytona's the only major race I haven't won. That definitely makes it a high priority. Our biggest race is the Daytona 500.

Harvick • There's nothing even close that measures up to the Daytona 500. And to actually win the race, everywhere you go now you're introduced as Daytona champion. It's the race that makes our sport what it is.

Jimmie Johnson • The Daytona 500 is the only race that brings a title with it. That just speaks to how big it is. Before I won my season championships, I would be introduced as the Daytona 500 winner. You're never introduced as, say, the Darlington champion. No, you're the Daytona 500 champion.

Earnhardt Jr. • So many great drivers have come into our sport and never won the Daytona 500. It's such a hard prize. I used to think I'd never win. So when it does happen, it's amazing and you cannot fucking believe it. Winning the Daytona 500 is the single most exciting moment of your life. That was the single most-coolest day ever. ●

MARDI GRAS, 2008-STYLE!

Locals swear the country's wildest pre-Lenten bacchanal is more intense since Katrina crashed the party. Here, an insider's guide, day by day, to the new and improved Mardi Gras.

JANUARY 31

Thursday, 7:30 P.M.
STOCK UP ON BEADS
Even girls gone wild won't flash for dinky beads, but deluxe baubles cost $1–$10 a pop. Five days before Fat Tuesday, check out the Krewe of Muses parade Uptown. This all-female posse doles out perfect throws to dudes, who later flip them in the French Quarter. Yay, capitalism!

FEBRUARY 1

Friday, 6 P.M.
GET GUMBO'D
It's nearly impossible to squeeze into a restaurant as the revelry amps up, so scarf po' boys at Acme Oyster House (724 Iberville), just steps off Bourbon, before it's too late. Another tactic: Grab a muffuletta sandwich to go from Central Grocery (923 Decatur).

FEBRUARY 2

Saturday, 4:30 P.M.
LIGHT THE NIGHT
Endymion is a killer Mardi Gras parade, and the superkrewe is returning to its traditional midcity route for the first time since Katrina. Look for big floats and celebrity riders, but no word if Grand Marshal Kevin Costner will toss $9 to everyone who saw The Upside of Anger.

FEBRUARY 3

Sunday, 7:30 A.M.
SWEAT IT OUT
OK, hammers and hangovers don't mix. But to truly grasp what Katrina did to the Big Easy, pop an aspirin and volunteer at a Habitat for Humanity project (hey, a little philanthropy never hurts, even during a week-long superbender). Sign up in advance at habitat-nola.org.

FEBRUARY 4

Monday, 1 P.M.
GET IN THE GROOVE
Why stand around and drink when you can strut around and drink? Marching societies fronted by brass bands tramp through the Quarter at all hours, inviting bystanders to join in. Pre-game with them at Lafitte's Blacksmith Shop (941 Bourbon)...if you can hang.

FEBRUARY 5

FAT TUESDAY

5 A.M. INSERT EARPLUGS
Collapse into the nearest bed, backseat, or jail cell for some much-needed shuteye.

8 A.M. UP AND AT 'EM!
Fat Tuesday's raging kickoff parade, Zulu, is rolling, tossing coveted souvenirs to the crowd.

12 P.M. DRESS FOR EXCESS
Adopt the tradition of donning a costume. Tip: Since the storm, darker themes are popular.

1 P.M. IMBIBE LIKE A PRO
Maximize your booze dollar with a Hand Grenade from Tropical Isle (several walk-up locations).

2 P.M. GET SQUEEZED
Wriggle into the jam-packed 300 block of Bourbon—ground zero for balconies and strip clubs.

3 P.M. BE PEE SAVVY
Katrina recovery efforts left the FQ with more portable johns, and the courthouse has short lines.

4 P.M. CROSS THE BORDER
Take a break from the Quarter crush at Blue Nile, a bar in the less-touristy Marigny 'hood.

11:59 P.M. EXIT STRATEGY
Cops roll in at 12, so find a bar that rages on behind locked doors. Then go home. Seriously.

IRON STOMACH!

Convert your bow-shaped belly keg into an arrowproof six-pack with a gauntlet of grueling UFC-worthy moves. Abs, prepare to be unceremoniously unearthed!

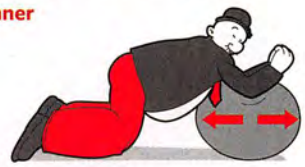
"Hey, my eyes are up here, ladies."

Another day, another half-assed sit-up session at the gym to wrap up your quarter-assed workout. Why can't everyone be born with an impossibly ripped, waxed, CGI-enhanced six-pack? Since this is real life and not 300, we sought the ab-building advice of Kevin Kearns, strength and conditioning coach for UFC warrior-scholar Kenny Florian and creator of burnwithkearns.com. "These nine exercises represent the three basic abdominal movements—forward, lateral, rotational—you need for any sport," Kearns says. "When you're done, you'll feel like your abs were ripped out of your gut." The three main muscle groups he targets here are the rectus abdominus, or bumpy surface muscles that make up your visible abs; the transverse abdominus, or thin muscle band around your midsection; and the obliques, or side stomach muscles beneath your inner-tube-like love handles. "Bodybuilders alternate between major muscle groups like chest and back every other day," says Kearns, "but the point of 'functional strength training' is to work every muscle functionally every day, including your abs." That means you can add these moves to any workout for a core that drops ladies jaws...and you know what else.

Rectus Abdominus

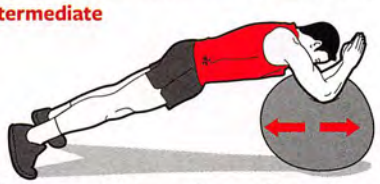
• Stability Ball Roll-up

Beginner



Place your elbows on a stability ball and roll forward till they extend just beyond your chin, then stop and go in reverse. Try: 3 sets of 8

Intermediate



Take it up a notch by coming up off your knees and balancing on your toes, rolling back and forth from a "plank" position. Try: 3 sets of 10

Advanced

For the extreme version, extend your arms until you're in a push-up position over the ball. Just ignore that tearing sound. Try: 3 sets of 12

TEXT, STEVE MAZZUCCHI; ILLUSTRATIONS, OLLIE BLAND

Transverse Abdominus • Medicine Ball Kayak

Beginner

Grab a six-pound medicine ball and sit with your back angled 45 degrees. Now twist your torso, swinging the ball from side to side as if you were rowing some perverse kayak. Try: 3 sets of 20

Intermediate

Raise the difficulty level not by upping the weight but by lifting your feet several inches off the floor. The workout will be significantly harder as you struggle to balance. Try: 3 sets of 20

Advanced

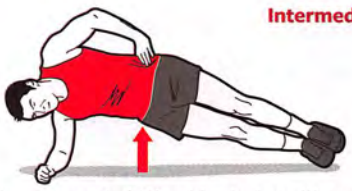
Ready to burn? Start in the intermediate position, but as you sweep the ball from side to side, angle your quivering knees as far as you can in the opposite direction. Try: 3 sets of 20

Obliques • Sideways Plank

Beginner

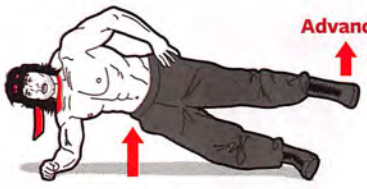
Lie on your side, supporting weight with your elbow. Lift hips to straighten your spine and hold (side plank position). Seeing spots? You're doing it right. Try: 3 30-second holds per side

Intermediate



When you can hold the side plank position with ease, man up by lowering your hip to an inch off the floor, then raising it back up. Repeat until you feel like puking. Try: 3 sets of 10 per side

Advanced



Wanna get nuts? From the plank position, raise your top leg as high as you can, then bring it down and lower your hip to an inch off the floor. Scream, "Boosh!" Try: 3 sets of 5–10 per side

Fit to Fight

How UFC assassin Kenny Florian supercharges his ab routine.

Top Off the Tank

"If I have a big training session the next day, I treat my body like a marathoner's, with broccoli and chicken pasta." Note: Nipple tape not necessary.

Grease the Wheels

Slow morning? Make a high-octane treat. "I like a smoothie with unsweetened apple juice, soy milk, blueberries, banana, and vanilla protein powder."

Cool the Engine

Your recovery is key. "Recharge with low-fat cottage cheese, grapes, walnuts, and an apple on the side." (Hot Pockets, as you see, don't make the cut.).

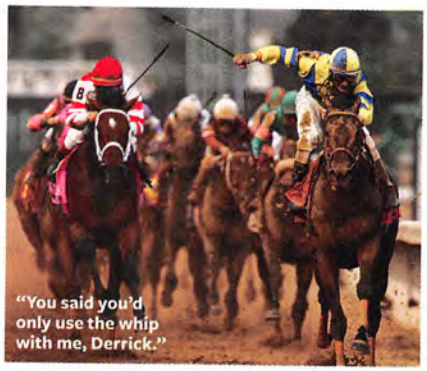
HOW TO PURCHASE...

Get your grubby mitts on the two things that define a man's world.

This page brought to you by Barbaro-brand superglue.



"You said you'd only use the whip with me, Derrick."

...a Racehorse!

Hitting the track is that much sweeter when you're watching your own pony kick ass. Here's how to make it happen.

Name Your Price

Thoroughbreds aren't cheap, so unless you spend your summers at the Kennedy compound in Cape Cod, you'll probably need track-savvy buddies to split your horse's cost and upkeep. "About 10 guys throwing in $5,000 each can get you a decent $25,000 horse and cover a year's worth of training, stabling, and feed," says Daniel Metzger, president of the Thoroughbred Owners and Breeders Association.

Shop Around

You can buy an untrained animal straight from the farm, pick up a hot prospect at a "purchasing event" (a race in which a horse can be bought for a pre-determined amount), or hit a public auction and let the market dictate a fair price. In any case, hire a trainer beforehand at your local racetrack—that or risk a premature trip to the dog food factory.

Cover Your Assets

To guarantee you're not the one who ends up sleeping in a barn, Metzger advises setting up an LLC (limited liability company) to separate your racing business from your personal assets. And be sure to elect your most responsible buddy "managing partner" so unpaid oats bills don't get in the way of swilling bourbon in the winner's circle, you cheap bastard.

Ride It to the Bank

The possibility of losing your shirt is real, but chances are you'll recoup your investment through track winnings over the first year or two. And if you discover the next Secretariat, an early retirement could lead to millions in stud fees. "With a good racehorse, the real payoff is the breeding shed," says Metzger. "That's where the real money's at."

...a Muscle Car!

A windowless van has utility, but a '74 Camaro makes you even cooler than the kids who smoked in high school.

Stay Simple

Picking up a classic for less than 15 grand requires a few concessions—you're not going to land a souped-up V-8 or a custom trim. But a standard-issue second-generation muscle car is well within reach. Floyd Garrett, owner of the Muscle Car Museum in Sevierville, Tennessee, says the sweet spot for Camaro deals falls between 1970 and 1974.

Snoop Into the Past

Like that stripper at your brother's bachelor party, you need to figure out where she's been—but as long as her body holds up, anything else can be fixed. "If I found a '69 Camaro with a good, solid body and the engine had a rod thrown out the side of it," Garrett says, "that wouldn't bother me a bit." Beware of heavy undercoats hiding 30 years of Detroit winters, and check the trim tag on the firewall to see if the paint color changed—a clue to long hours spent at the body shop.

Keep It Real

The more original parts, the more valuable the car, so hunt under the hood for as many GM stamps as you can find. When it comes to making your own repairs, almost anything is fair game: Radiators, alternators, starters, even entire engines can be swapped with moderate ease and expense.

Pimp Your Ride

While the '70s offered marvels like outrageous horsepower, sofalike backseats, and Freddie Mercury, a few inventions from the golden age of chest hair fell short, namely brakes. Garrett advises replacing the front set of drum brakes with discs for the added convenience of being able to stop on command.

VALENTINE'S DAY SURVIVAL GUIDE

Perennial lovebird loather Artie Lange on enduring the most nauseating corporate holiday of the year.

Thinking about popping the question on Valentine's Day?

Forget it. It's like getting drunk on New Year's Eve—a complete cliché. Whenever I'm performing stand-up on Valentine's Day, comedy club owners are always asking me to take heart-shaped Mylar balloons onstage for women in the crowd. You go, "Is Jennifer here?" And then you have to give Jennifer these crappy balloons as her boyfriend proposes. Every single time I'd get fired or suspended because I would just lose it on these people. What a pathetic night to get engaged.

Since you have to endure the holiday, at least make it interesting.

College basketball is in full swing around Valentine's Day, so I like to bet on a game. I'll put down $1,000, and if Georgia Tech covers I'll take my girl out to a nice restaurant and we'll do something big that night. If not, we stay in. Women might think this is selfish or obnoxious, but the thing about me is, well, what you see is what you get.

When it comes to gifts, you can't go wrong with stuff for her bathroom.

You take shampoo and call it Johnson & Johnson, it's $2. You take the label off and you make it "pumpkin lavender body gel," now it's $11.50. I don't get it, but I date a lot of Italian women, and sometimes they smell like what they're cooking. So some scented body gel and shampoo is a subtle way to say, Hey, here's some stuff that smells better than the meat sauce you made last night.

Flowers may be tired, but she'll love them.

Some women will give you that b.s. where if you send flowers, it's not creative enough. They'll roll their eyes like, "Well, that took a lot of thought." But when guys try to pretend like they know what women will like, it never works. It's like, Hey, how about a nice red frying pan so you could make some eggs every once in a while? Now some really nice flowers are sounding pretty OK, I think.

As a Valentine's gift, chocolate is a tossup.

Most hot chicks have food rules, but chocolate is a decent gift...especially if you live in the Midwest, where I'm the thinnest person in the room whenever I perform. Usually I like to bust into the box on the way over to her house and show up with it all over my face.

PONG BLASTER DELUXE!

Snag your dad's Aqua Net and jerry-rig this pint-size cannon in 30 seconds flat.

Supplies

01	Paper towel roll
02	Duct tape
03	Scissors
04	Grill lighter
05	Hair spray
06	Ping-Pong ball

Dig a paper towel roll out of the trash and wrap up the end nice and tight with duct tape. It's like you're in elementary school all over again, but with bigger hands and more dastardly intentions!

Using a sharp pair of scissors, poke a small hole in the center of the tape. Don't make it too wide or you won't get a good seal on the grill lighter (and you need a tight fit to hold the gas inside).

Gently pop the end of the grill lighter through the hole in the tape, dead center, then slide 'er inside until the plastic base backs right up against the tape. (What, we can't say "slide 'er inside"?)

Spray the hair spray (we know you still use it) into the tube for two full seconds to ready the fuel. Try not to soak the cardboard—the goal is to have some free gas floating around in there.

Quickly drop the Ping-Pong ball into your flimsy gun (it should just barely fit) and point it away from anything alive, except for that exotic plant your girlfriend always loved more than you.

Hold down the safety on the grill lighter and pull the trigger to fire off the Ping-Pong ball. It may take a few clicks because there isn't too much oxygen inside the tube to fuel the flame, but once she sparks, that tiny spherical projectile will rocket out faster than you'd ever be able to spike it with a paddle (and with a fiery burst that's far more intimidating than your Roger Federer overhand).

Danny Kass

Age: 25
Occupation: Snowboarder, president of Grenade Gloves
X Games medals: Seven (plus two Olympic silver medals)
Progressive thinking: A New Jersey native with a punk-rock aesthetic and a taste for big air, Kass has won just about every prize a snowboarder can, which may explain why he's looking beyond the slopes for his next challenge. "I really wanted to create my own world," he says, "so I got a couple of friends together, created Grenade Gloves, Grenade Films, and the Grenade Games, where I'm trying to get back to my roots. Did I mention that I am the president so I can reign over the good times?"

Thrill seeker: Travis Rice, one of Kass' pals, recalls a Kass stunt at the Nissan X-Trail in Japan, an event with 50,000 fans: "Just before his final run, Danny puts on a golden Buddha mask, dons a robe, and pulls out the sweetest Stony Backside 3." When asked to give a special message for the kids, Kass-as-Buddha thanked the Japanese crowd for their 3,000 years of dedication.
Favorite toy: While Kass never strays too far into the bling, there is one prize he treasures: "Super Jeep, a black Wrangler with 33-inch tires and a huge Grenade sticker on the side. It has a 9,000-pound towing wench on it. That way there is no storm that can hold me down!"

THE EXTREME TEAM

X Games medals are a bonus for these top snowboarders and skiers. The real fun is in the side hustle.

Travis Rice

Age: 25
Occupation: Snowboarder, race organizer, filmmaker
X Games medals: Three
Inspiration by Darwin: Despite loads of medals, the Jackson Hole, Wyoming native feels the spirit of his sport gets lost at competitions like the X Games (January 24–27): "A lot of people watch contests, and it's good TV, but for the riders it doesn't embody anything about why they actually snowboard." To recapture that spirit, Rice has teamed with Quiksilver to start a new contest, titled Natural Selection. "I'd have to say the rider list is the heaviest of all time," Rice says. "Bigger even than the X Games."
Jack of all trades: "It's hard for people who don't know the ins and outs to watch a regular snowboarding video," Rice says. So in addition to Natural Selection, he's spearheading That's It, That's All, using Hollywood-style equipment and cinematography. He calls it "the biggest video of all time."
Sun versus snow: When not carving it up on the slopes, Rice likes to kick back on the water. "I got this new GPS system in my sailboat. It's a 35-foot catamaran I keep in the Abacos, Bahamas. That's where I just came from," he says. "Sailor by hobby, snowboarder by trade." Not that he's ready to leave the slopes behind: "There is a lot of winter on this planet. I want to go to Russia. I want to go to the Middle East, Israel, Afghanistan, and Iran."

Tanner Hall

Age: 24
Occupation: Freeskier, cofounder of Armada Skis
X Games medals: Nine
Mountain man: On skis by age three and on the pro circuit by 15, Hall knows a little something about speed. But it was only recently that he learned to appreciate the excitement of life outside the lines. "I still love competing, but now that I'm getting older I realize how crazy the back country is. You have to respect the mountain," he says. "If not, you'll get in serious trouble, and that's where death comes in."
Living on the edge: Two years ago, while skiing in Utah's Wasatch Range, the ace freestyler took a dangerously slow approach to a jump on the infamous Chad's Gap. "I broke both ankles and both heels. That really hurt," Hall recalls. "It definitely taught me a lot about patience, because it was 10 months of not skiing at all, three months bedridden. Now I know to go a lot faster on the big jumps."
Party time: "The 2001 Red Bull house at Mount Snow was insane. We used to have the craziest parties ever!" he says of the lighter side of life on the circuit. "One time I was sitting by the front door, and Eminem and his whole crew showed up. At the time I thought he was the coolest dude ever, so to be in a room partying with Eminem and the best winter athletes in the world was definitely insane."

This page: Red Bull beanie, sponsored athletes only; Oakley Frogskin glasses, $100, and solid top jacket, $125; Rockers-NYC Evil Heat sweatshirt, $260; Grenade Doobie Bros. gloves, $46; Oakley Pieced Together pants, $190; Dalbello Il Moro ski boots, $700; Armada THall skis, $625.

Jon Olsson

Age: 25
Occupation: Freeskier, race promoter
X Games medals: Eight
The afterlife: Olsson started his career on the Swedish junior team but bailed to focus on the less rigid side of his sport. Now, having made his name as one of the world's top freestylers, he's ready for the discipline of team life. "Last summer I made a bet that I could make the Olympic Alpine team in 2014," he says. "Everyone tells me it is impossible, but that just makes me want to try even harder."
Speed freak: "I love fast cars of any kind. I have a Lamborghini Gallardo with studded tires, a winter camo paint job, and a ski box on top," says Olsson. "One time after an event, my pal and I threw our skis into the box, and there were fans screaming at us. We were like, 'Do you realize we just got paid to ski and we're driving off in a Gallardo?' It's pretty awesome."
Party like a rock star: So how does Olsson cut loose when he's not on the slopes or organizing March's Jon Olsson Invitational Super Sessions? "I'm really good friends with everyone who runs the bars in Stockholm, and we try and uphold the rock-star lifestyle. I save myself for the winter and party all summer. I think it's one of the reasons the riders love coming to Sweden—because the parties and the girls are really, really hot. It's not a myth."

Male Enhancement Pills . . .

Is it a Hoax or Do They Really Work?

Dr. Daniel Stein, M.D.

I wish I had a dollar for every patient or person that asked me over the last few years about increasing the size of "that certain part of the male body." The preoccupation with size that men have is a mystery to most women. The fact is it is completely normal for most men to want to be larger. It doesn't matter if they are smaller than average, average, or larger than average. It's even been my experience that guys that are almost too big, so big in fact that many women wont go near them with a ten foot pole (sorry about that) still want to be larger!

I was so intrigued by this fact that I started to do research about the "so called" male enhancement pills that came on the market several years ago. The concept that a simple pill could noticeably increase the size of a man's organ seemed plausible, but I wanted to know more. I had done much research over the years about certain sexually enhancing compounds available, so I believed the concept was sound that a pill could be made to make a man larger.

My first task was to look at some of the ads I had seen in magazines for male enhancement. There were some amazing claims by many of these makers. My personal favorite was a cream that claimed to make men instantly larger. I had to laugh out loud when I read what it said. The ad read, "apply cream, rub vigorously, watch it grow." I thought for a minute and then decided you could put virtually anything on a man, including guacamole, and if he rubbed vigorously it would grow. Then there was an ad for a pill, that if taken daily, would increase the length of a man by 3 to 4 inches in just a few short days (sorry about the "short" comment).

I'm sorry, but after all those years of medical school, I know enough about anatomy to know that a guy who is 5 inches in length isn't going to add 3 to 4 inches to his little friend unless he buys a rope, gets a large brick, finds a bridge and...well, you get the picture. At about this time I was beginning to think that perhaps these makers hadn't found the magic mixture of compounds I had hoped they might have.

As the founder of both the Stein Medical Institute and the Foundation for Intimacy, I have spent most of my adult life trying to improve men and women's sexual health. I pride myself on being the best medical doctor I can be and my reputation is important to me. So, when out of the clear blue sky, I got a call from the makers of Extenze, the leader in male enhancement, wanting me to be in one of their TV commercials, I thought, "Boy, did they pick the wrong guy!"

"other products claimed that a pill, if taken daily, would increase the length of a man by 3 to 4 inches."

Little did they know that I had done real research into this concept and had recently looked at some of these male enhancement products. But the makers of Extenze seemed to be genuinely convinced that their product really worked, and they claim to have sold over 100 million capsules to men all over the world. "Over 100 million capsules taken by men." With that single declaration, they had my interest. Either Extenze really worked or these guys were the world's greatest snake oil salesmen. So I requested that they send me Extenze formula so I could review it, then we would talk.

I then visited the Extenze.com web site, where I found a page that showed the top twelve adult film stars, all holding Extenze and endorsing it. I thought to myself, "Is it possible Extenze actually works?"

The next day I received the proprietary Extenze formula and there it was, virtually all of the ingredients that I hoped would be in a male enhancement product, 19 pharmaceutical grade nutraceuticals. There was Yohimbe (which used to be available by prescription only,) L-Arginine, Maca...all of it was there.

I contacted the makers of Extenze the very next day and asked them what they needed me for. They explained that they had a desire to have a medical doctor in their T.V. commercials to talk about the effectiveness of the ingredients in Extenze. At that moment an idea sprang into my head. I told them if they would let me improve the formula of Extenze, I would do the commercial for free!

Before I knew it I was working with their

"they claim to have sold almost a quarter of a billion capsules to men."

chemists at the manufacturing plant where we added the most revolutionary thing to the formula of Extenze. We added DHEA, also known as the "mother of all hormones." DHEA is the most important human prohormone and is the prohormone that converts into testosterone in men. DHEA levels decrease with the aging. Production peaks in a man's early 20's, and declines about 10% every 10 years. Low levels of testosterone can lead to low sex drive and a smaller sex organ.

After a few more weeks of tweaking the formula of Extenze, we were done. The new Extenze formula has been selling even better then the old formula, with over 75% of sales to repeat customers. Extenze has been on the market for 7 years and has sold almost a quarter of a billion capsules to men all over the world. It doesn't matter if you're 18 or 80 years old. In my opinion Extenze can make you larger, harder and increase both your intensity and pleasure and it is as simple as taking a single tablet daily. Extenze is so sure it would work for anyone that they're sending out a free one-week supply of Extenze for nothing more then the cost of a postage stamp. You can contact them directly at 800-586-0302. I recommend any man healthy enough to engage in sexual activity should try Extenze. You have nothing to lose but a lot to gain. ★
